The World Swipes Right on Adam Rippon

America’s Favorite Out Skater on Finding His Gay Power, Sex-Inspired Costumes and His Post-Olympics Clapback for Tinder Ghosters

BY CHRIS AZZOPARDI

“‘Yes, this is an interview,’ a schoolgirl-giggle Adam Rippon deadpans to fellow figure skater Charlie White who, naturally, is curious about the current topic of conversation: sex and harnesses, and how both come together to inspire his uniquely nontraditional collection of on-ice ensembles. Rippon is chatting while putting on his performance makeup in a locker room inside a Rhode Island arena, about to serve a graceful two-song solo during a ‘Stars on Ice’ stop, featuring his Olympic peers.

‘(Charlie is) like, ‘I’ve never done an interview like this before,’” Rippon tells me. “He said he’s never been honest and open.” Rippon takes a long, very “Adam Rippon for dramatic effect” pause, the kind you know and love if you’ve been obsessing over every fabulous, filterless turn of phrase our self-proclaimed “glamazon bitch” has turned: “You should try it out!”

No kidding: The 28-year-old ice champion leads by example, proving with unapologetic defiance – he fiercely came at the vice president of the United States for his anti-gay rhetoric – and iconic Folsom elegance, like the S&M gear he wore during the Oscars this year, that being yourself can take you places. If you’re Rippon, who’s from Scranton, Pennsylvania, it can take you to Pyeongchang, South Korea, where Rippon set fire to the ice during the 2018 Winter Olympics, becoming the first openly gay U.S. male athlete to win a (bronze) medal in a Winter Olympics.

Rippon’s mere existence as a brazenly gay global inspiration with a tongue as sharp as the blades on his skates has been celebrated for his “faggy magic,” as coined by journalist Peter Moskowitz. And at a recent “Stars on Ice” show in Detroit, he elicited the wildest applause, from suburban moms to girl tweens and a squadron of genuinely proud queens. Reese Witherspoon loves him. So does Elmo.

And like any good mother, Sally Field tried to set him up with her gay son.

My roommate was starstruck even before Rippon rang me, so nervous just knowing Adam Rippon would be calling that she left our Airbnb apartment. I share this with Rippon, who’s, again, all giggles: “It’s a really high compliment that your roommate needed to leave.” (Later, during our goodbye, he playfully says, “Tell your roommate I said ‘hi.’”)

Rippon would make his “Dancing with the Stars” debut weeks after our call, slaying a voguing cha-cha to RuPaul’s “Sissy That Walk.” But before he competed against Tonya Harding with partner Jenna Johnson during the ABC dance-off, the skater opened up about how booze kills his wit game and what he tells guys on Tinder who want a second chance with him and inspiring suicidal queer youth, all the while, being his irresistible self. That’s all you can really ask for – and in Rippon’s case, want.

I want to give you a phone hug and say thanks for giving this 35-year-old man a new level of realism to aspire to.

I’m hugging you back.

You stood next to Britney Spears at the GLAAD Media Awards recently for a pic. I heard she liked the way you smelled.

Yes, she did. It’s just, like, weird – you’ve seen somebody your whole entire life, and then you walk up to them and you’re like, “Oh, you’re real.” But she was really nice. We just congratulated her on her award and she was like, “You smell really nice,” and I was like, “Thank you so much, ’cause that’s so important to me.”

Is it weird that now I want to know how you smell?

I smell nice.

Like primrose?

Yes.

And that night was special because gay Olympian Gus Kenworthy kissed you on stage. How exactly would you describe your relationship with Gus at this point?

Umm (laughs), so, I mean, we’re just friends, obviously. His boyfriend was backstage laughing at him, and so he was just trying to be funny. Gus is a nut.

But you’re so close. And both of you being gay Olympians, it seems you’ve really bonded.

Oh, absolutely. We’re just like brothers. I guess brothers who kiss. But no, I love him, he’s so nice, and we’re very good friends.

You seem like the kind of person who likes a few nice things in his dressing room. What is on your “Stars on Ice” tour rider?

I try to keep it super simple so I don’t forget a lot of things. So, when I am traveling I literally just have my skates, my costume, and that’s basically it. I try to keep it so super simple or I’m gonna lose all my shit.

Don’t you have people who can remember this stuff for you? An entourage?

It’s getting there. Slowly. But I still want to, like, be able to be self-sufficient, you know what I mean?

For a while, at least.

At least for the rest of the month.

I think that’s a lofty goal.

You know, dream big.

So, “Dancing with the Stars”: Can you even believe that you’re competing against Tonya Harding?

(Sighs) Ah, I cannot.

What is that like?

It’s not a super big deal, but I think she’s got a lot going on, so I’m just gonna let her do her own thing, probably. Probably best.

You’ve met?

I did meet her. She’s very pleasant.

Team Tonya or Team Nancy?

Well, I mean, Tonya tried to kill someone, so I’m Team Nancy, probably.

Honestly think that’s probably the safe choice to make.

I think it’s probably the right choice.

What did you think of “I, Tonya”?

I loved it. I thought Margot Robbie (who played Harding) was great. Amazing.

Who would you cast as Adam in “I, Adam”?

Well, Margot did so well, so maybe just Margot Robbie is a safe bet.

Who inspires your on-ice style?

The skating world inspires it a little bit, and then… you’re just gonna know that I’m trashy. I look at like, um, sex stuff and stuff people wear – harnesses and stuff – and the design is quite amazing. I will bring them to my costume designer and we will make them... more appropriate for a competition.

For a PG audience?
Yes. But actually, it’s not for that audience. But I make it for them.

That harness you wore to the Oscars in March: Where is it?
It’s in (fashion designer) Jeremy Scott’s office. The suit was by Moschino, and so it was from Jeremy’s office and he lent it to me. I’m obsessed with Jeremy. He’s amazing.

Do you get to keep these costumes?
I keep my own costumes. Because, like, I bought them, outright. But the Oscars outfit was for the runway – from the carpet back to the office.

Hard to give that up. So many opportunities to wear something like that.
I know! Like to a wedding.

Or a funeral.
Yeah, anything. The grocery store.

What’s the biggest difference between 12-year-old Adam Rippon and the Adam Rippon I’m talking to right now?
I think the biggest difference is all of the things that I’ve been through. I think now I have a better idea of who I am, and I think I had a lot of self-discovery to go through when I was young. I was just as trash – but now I’m just older.

More comfortable with the trash?
Yeah, I’m just more comfortable being trashy.

Were you a sassy kid?
I don’t think I realized how sassy I was till I was at the Olympics and people were like “Aahahah, you’re so sassy” and then I was “Aahahah… you think so?” And they’re like, “Oh yeah, you’re, like, SASSY.” And I was like, I just thought I was fresh. Like, “No – you’re sassy.” Oh. OK.

Who inspires your sassiness?
The person who inspires me to be sassy is my mom.

So it’s in the blood.
(Laughs) Yeah, it’s definitely in the blood. It’s something I can’t control. You know how you’re born – you sometimes have curly hair or blue eyes, and I have curly hair, but I don’t have blue eyes. But I also have my mom’s sassy attitude.

Born this way.
Born this way, for sure. Genetics.

Your future: What’s off the table? Where do you draw the line?
Like, I’m not gonna do porn. That’s drawing the line, I guess.

A reality show?
I don’t think I would do a reality show – I mean, I’m doing “Dancing with the Stars.” That’s a reality show. I’m not gonna do, like, “Big Brother” or anything.

Are you getting a lot of offers?
Yeah, I’m getting a lot of offers to do stuff. A lot of it’s ghetto.

What percentage of these offers are you turning down?
I’m talking a little bit to everybody, and honestly my schedule’s so crazy right now I don’t even know who. I barely even know where I am right now.

You’ve been asked to do a lot of things you may not have done if it weren’t for the Olympics, such as getting custom-made condoms from Thrillist because you thought the condoms in South Korea were “generic.” The New York Times also basically wrote an entire feature on your abs. What is the most ridiculous request that’s been asked of you?
I don’t know if I’ve had a super ridiculous request, or that I can really think that I took seriously. I think people have asked me to do crazy things and I’m like, “Hahaha.” And then I forgot about it a minute later.

The media loves getting you drunk.
Here’s the thing: I don’t drink a lot. Barely anything. And so everyone’s like, “Haha, come on the show and just have drinks!” And I’m like, “OK.” So, I’ll have one or a little bit, but I feel like I’m way funnier not drunk. I’m not as sharp, I’m not as witty; I’m not myself when I’m drunk. I mean, I feel like I like to be in the moment, and if I’m in the moment, I can focus and then I can be quick and witty.

This wild ride: If you could relive any part of it, which part would that be?
I don’t know, because I still feel like I’m in the middle of a wild ride. I haven’t had a moment to really be like, “This Olympics experience is over,” ’cause right now I’m still skating a bunch with “Stars on Ice,” and I think when I finally have a day off, I’ll be like, “Oh, wow, there’s a lot going on.” But I haven’t had a day off, which I actually think is amazing and great, and I’m trying to enjoy every single second. I think one thing that saved me is, I don’t really know what my schedule is. I just kind of plan a few days in advance; I don’t feel overwhelmed. I’m just having a good time with it.

How will you spend that day off?
Um, probably napping.

The whole day?
The whole day.

Anything you haven’t been able to do since you’ve been on this all-consuming ride?
Honestly, the only thing I haven’t been good

When There Were Seven
What We Learned About the Seven Candidates Vying to be the Next Governor

BY TODD A. HEYWOOD

Come Jan. 1 there will be a new Governor, but for now, there are seven competing for the position. And, with all seven people vying to occupy the office sitting on a simple stage in East Lansing Thursday, May 10, one would expect a clash of ideas and a battle of wills. But, the four GOP and three Democratic candidates answered questions for the Michigan Press Association with relatively few bumps.

There was a cantankerous and divided Republican field – consisting of Attorney General Bill Schuette, Lt. Gov. Brian Calley, State Sen. Patrick Colbeck and Dr. Jim Hines. On the Democratic side, they heard a Bernie Sanders’ like rally call by Dr. Abdul El-Sayed, a reserved and middle-of-the-road former Sen. Gretchen Whitmer and a billionaire on a vanity tour, Shri Thanedar.

Here are some key takeaways:

Trump-mancing

The GOP candidates don’t agree on much except their undying devotion to President Donald Trump. In fact, despite Trump’s endorsement of Bill Schuette, the candidates are still vying to to wrestle that endorsement from the attorney general’s hands to clutch it for themselves.

On May 9, on a debate produced by WOOD TV 8, Colbeck made a plea for Trump to “reconsider” his endorsement of Schuette. Hines in both his appearance on the television debate and the MPA conference made the case that he was for “always Trump” because he saw him as disruptive as an outsider. Schuette, meanwhile, smacked Calley around verbally for withdrawing his support of then-candidate Trump when the infamous “Access Hollywood” tape surfaced. That’s the tape where Trump is heard discussing grabbing women by their privates and forcing himself where Trump is heard discussing grabbing women by their privates and forcing himself.

Colbeck argued Trump should rescind his endorsement of Schuette and instead give it to Colbeck.

The only high-profile endorsement given and withdrawn so far, however, has been Fox News host Sean Hannity’s endorsement of Schuette. Colbeck made a plea for Trump to “reconsider” his endorsement of Schuette, the candidates are still vying to to wrestle that endorsement from the attorney general’s hands to clutch it for themselves.

The only high-profile endorsement given and withdrawn so far, however, has been Fox News host Sean Hannity’s endorsement of Colbeck. More on that later.

The candidates also showed a partisan divide between whether the media was treating Trump fairly. Colbeck accused the media of doing “Mad Lib” reporting.

“A lot of stories that I found get written about different events are actually more like a ‘Mad Lib’ where people have actually filled in the adjectives,” Colbeck said. “The story’s already written, the tone’s already set, and for me that’s disconcerting because our republic depends upon the people who are electing people into office getting good information.”

Calley said he is troubled by the reliance on unnamed sources.

“It’s a gotcha-type of reporting, it tends to lead with conjecture and unnamed sources at a level that I’ve never seen before,” he said. “And what I’ve come to tell people when I’m asked about some sort of a sensational story about Donald Trump is, you have to wait 24 to 48 hours because in most cases there’s other information that comes out that provides a more balanced view on what happened. And I think it’s unfortunate because the media does have such an important role to play in our democracy, we’re talking about first amendment rights here.”

Schuette, for his part, accused the national media of being “elites.”

“These are the same elites that look down on ordinary folks that need to rebuild our infrastructure as well,” he said. “They look down on people who work.”

Meanwhile, Democrats Whitmer, Thanedar and El-Sayed said they thought that Trump was being covered fairly. El-Sayed however offered a more nuanced analysis of coverage of Trump.

“I think the right question is, is somebody who occupies the highest office in the land fair to the media? Because when you go around calling the media fake news, when you go around destabilizing what is truth from falsehood, you have to ask yourself, what actually is truth anymore?” El-Sayed said. “I respect deeply the work that you do, because you’ve got to tell the story. There is no democracy without a free press, and when you have a president attacking that very institution of a free press, you have to ask yourself, where are we as a society?”

The whole question of how fair the media is also feeds another important issue: Transparency.

Michigan has consistently gotten poor scores on governmental transparency. The state legislature and the governor’s office are both exempt from the Freedom of Information Act, while the judiciary, which is tapped to fill certain countywide posts when they are vacant, is not subject to the Open Meetings Act.

Transparency

Here’s the deal: Michigan has consistently gotten poor scores on governmental transparency. The state legislature and the governor’s office are both exempt from the Freedom of Information Act, while the judiciary, which is tapped to fill certain countywide posts when they are vacant, is not subject to the Open Meetings Act.

And just how much do the various candidates have in the bank? Who do they owe money to? What property do they own? None of that is required for disclosure either under Michigan law.

The candidates all agreed that transparency was important, but the reality of transparency offered by the candidates is blurry at best. This issue also opened the door for an attack by Calley leveled against Schuette.

“Not only have I released my tax returns, but I did complete the federal form. And, I just want to point out the hypocrisy here,” declared Calley. “Why put out a tax return but not the federal form? Why do you have to wait for a law to pass? What is it that’s being hidden? What we have heard is that they can’t really put out a financial disclosure, Bill Schuette

Flores Says ‘We’re Going Through a Process’ During Public Town Hall

Community Members Raise Concerns About Search for New Executive Director

BY JASON A. MICHAEL

FERNDALE – Members of the community were invited to Affirmations on May 11 to discuss changes at the LGBT community center and to get input and ideas from the organization’s supporters. The public town hall was held following the resignation of the executive director, Susan Erspamer, in late March; the board president, Brad Bell, last November; and the treasurer, Jon Beasley, last July.

The community conversation addressed questions about the Center’s finances, the election of new board members, and what the future holds for Interim Executive Director Liliana Reyes, who hosted the meeting along with Interim Board President Michael Flores.

A small crowd of about 20 attended, and they were all passionate about the Center. Reyes made the effort to alleviate any doubt and speak to concerns.

She said Affirmations sees about 30,000 guests annually, offers 200 different support and discussion groups, has over 200 active volunteers and is conducting more LGBTQ sensitivity trainings than ever before.

“From January 1 till today, we’ve trained about 750 individuals, and that’s a two-hour training,” said Reyes. “Including last year, we’ve trained over 2,000 professionals.”

Affirmations does this with a small staff of nine that includes Katie Koch, Development Director; Kyle Taylor, Development Coordinator; Becca Budde, Educating and Training Manager; Heather Aymer, Community Resource Coordinator; Ian Unger, Youth Coordinator; Ryan Fowler, Facilities Coordinator; Angela Sawyers, Finance Director; and Shelly McCallister, Counseling Supervisor.

Reyes spoke enthusiastically about reaching out and taking the center in new directions.

“We’re actively working with almost every major LGBT community center in Michigan,” she said. “We need to be everywhere. Part of what I’m doing is expanding the borders of Affirmations. We believe in and I believe in real partnerships.”

Reyes pointed to the Human Rights Campaign and the Trans Sistas of Color Project, both of which have office space at the Center now.

“This is the very first time Trans Sistas of Color Project has met outside of the city of Detroit. And they’re not only renting space here, they’ve given us a grant to do Trans Sistas of Color Project work,” said Reyes.

Reyes discussed her plan to reach further outside the realm of traditional LGBTQ work. This month, Affirmations staff and volunteers will deliver water to Flint.

“Water has nothing to do with LGBT, but if water is supporting life, then life is supporting LGBT,” said Reyes. “So it’s thinking outside of just the gay sphere and pushing it ... We’re thinking of unique ways to push the LGBT agenda that isn’t the historical way of just going to other LGBT communities.”

To Search or Not to Search

As far as the search for a new executive director is concerned, at the meeting, Flores said, “We are going to go through a process where we’re going to evaluate one – are we going to conduct a national search, and two – are we going to solicit the services of a third party or are we going to do that internally? And we’re obviously going to go through the process of interviewing any potential candidates.”

But for some in the crowd, the talk of another national search was not encouraging. The board conducted a national search to find executive director, Darrius D. Hilmon. When he left the Center, the board went back to their original search to hire Erspamer, their number two on the list. Both had brief tenures at the Center.

“You’ve gone through two search processes and they both duded out,” said Michelle Fox-Phillips, founder and executive director of the Gender Identity Network Alliance.

Flores deflected somewhat, stating that no one currently on the board had been involved in the previous two searches.

“I do hear the concern that the previous two searches did not yield [good] results,” said Flores. “I don’t think anyone [on the board] was there to give us details on what happened. However, we need to evaluate everything and determine what the most effective way to move forward with selecting a new ED is. We need to outline all the available avenues to the board. Then the board needs to select the best avenue and then proceed forward with that avenue.”

Flores, who has been nominated for board president, said input is needed from everyone.

“I’m leaning toward having some sort of cross-functional committee that involves the board and staff and the community to be able to look at different candidates and select the right candidate.”

However, members of the community said the search should already be over as they voiced confidence in Reyes and her leadership ability.

“We don’t want to bring an outsider in who doesn’t know Detroit’s LGBT community because every LGBT community is different,” said Jameson King, LGBT Detroit’s social media coordinator. “We need someone who’s already here to continue to make it better.”

Fox-Phillips continued, “As far as I’m concerned, we’ve found our executive director. I’m going to give her a vote of confidence.”

A former Affirmations board member, Michelle Brown, concurred.

“I want to second what Michelle said about moving forward,” she said. “We have been waiting. You went on a search and found an executive director who didn’t have knowledge not only of the LGBT community but of this community. And we all held our breath. Then you got the next person and we were all holding our breath to see if Affirmations would get it together. We don’t have time. I would say we are in a unique position right now. We have someone with a connection to the community and the qualifications. We don’t have the money to spend on another search.”

Reyes also received a vote of approval from the staff at the center.

“On behalf of the staff we want to 100 percent back Liliana,” said Koch. “We support her. We believe in her. And we’re committed in Affirmations succeeding and for Affirmations to succeed we want Liliana to succeed.”

When asked if she were interested in the position, Reyes, who has worked at the Center for almost four years, and served under three different executive directors, beamed.

“Of course I am,” she said. “Of course I am. I really love Affirmations and I mean really love it.”

The Money

Flores spoke about the Center’s budget and expenses as well.

“In terms of finances, I sit down with Liliana on a weekly basis. We are basically to budget. Moving forward we do see some gaps. But as a whole over these next couple of months, we are in the black,” he said. “It’s something that’s new to Affirmations to be in the black, but we’re confident that we’re going to end the year in the black again.”

One key to that is development, said Reyes.

“Katie and I have met with every staff member and board member to talk about what development looks like. So every single staff member is doing development. Every single member of staff is thinking about their costs and expenses,” she said.

An audit of the center was recently completed though the auditor’s findings have not yet been submitted. Flores said the board will review the budget after the first half of the fiscal year is over.

“The plan is not to make a change but if we need to we will,” he said. “Moving forward our income projections have to be realistic and based on facts and probability.”

Affirmations will host a second public town hall on June 21 at 11 a.m. Visit facebook.com/Affirmations/ for more information.

Oklahoma Gov. Mary Fallin signed into law on May 11 a “religious freedom” bill enabling taxpayer-funded adoption agencies to deny placement into LGBT homes, marking the first time in 2018 a state anti-LGBT bill became law.

In a statement on May 11, Fallin announced she signed Senate Bill 1140 into law “after many hours of consideration and investigation of Oklahoma’s current practice” amid a groundswell of opposition from LGBT rights supporters and child care agencies.

“SB 1140 allows faith-based agencies that contract with Oklahoma to continue to operate in accordance with their beliefs,” Fallin said. “In a day and time when diversity is becoming a core value to society because it will lead to more options, we should recognize its value for serving Oklahoma also because it leads to more options for loving homes to serve Oklahoma children.”

LGBT rights supporters had criticized SB 1140 and urged Fallin to veto the measure because it would enable religious-based adoption agencies in the state, which receive taxpayer funds, to deny placement into homes with LGBT placement over “religious objections.” Conceivably, the bill could also permit these agencies to subject LGBT children in foster care to widely discredited “ex-gay” conversion therapy.

A massive outcry from LGBT rights supporters emerged as SB 1140 moved through the state legislature and to Fallin’s desk. Joining LGBT groups in opposition to the bills are child welfare organizations including the American Academy of Pediatrics, the Child Welfare League of America and the North American Council on Adoptable Children.

Others who spoke out against the bill were Oklahoma native and “Will & Grace” star Megan Mullally, singer Kristin Chenoweth and former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations Samantha Power. According to Freedom for All Americans, more than 15,000 Oklahomans sent letters to their lawmakers urging them to reject the bill.

Supporters of the bill are organizations supporting Catholic adoption agencies — such as Catholic Charities and the Catholic Conference of Oklahoma — who say these agencies will have to shut their doors if forced to place children into LGBT homes.

In her statement, Fallin denied signing SB 1140 into law mean Oklahoma would be “in any way restricting current practice allowing LGBTQ individuals and couples fostering or adopting.”

“It does not ban same-sex adoption or foster care in Oklahoma,” Fallin said. “Instead, the bill will help continue Oklahoma’s successful placement of children with a broad array of loving families and basically maintain the status quo by setting forth in statute practices which have successfully worked for the best interest of Oklahoma children.”

As Fallin noted, other states — Mississippi, Michigan, Virginia, Texas, Alabama, South Dakota and North Dakota — have similar laws on the books. A lawsuit filed by the American Civil Liberties Union against the Michigan law is pending in the federal courts.

Insisting she’s “committed to preserving the rights of all Oklahomans who are eligible and want to be considered for parenting,” Fallin added she’ll sign an executive order to order the Oklahoma Department of Human Services to publish a list immediately of Oklahoma adoption and foster agencies on its website “who are willing to serve everyone who meets the Department of Human Services criteria for being a foster or adoptive parent.”

But Fallin’s assurance the law isn’t discriminatory and she’ll take additional action for potential LGBT parents wasn’t enough for LGBT rights, who condemned her for signing the measure.

JoDee Winterhof, senior vice president of policy and political affairs at the Human Rights Campaign, said in a statement it is “shameful” Fallin would sign SB 1140.

“Gov. Fallin has cemented her legacy, siding with discrimination and the legislature in throwing kids under the bus to create a ‘license to discriminate’ against LGBTQ Oklahomans,” Winterhof said. “With this action, Oklahoma has the negative distinction of being the only state to sign an anti-LGBTQ bill into law this year. Oklahoma’s leaders must live with that, and live with the reputational fallout that it may bring. This is wrong.”

Prior to Fallin signing the bill into law, LGBT rights supporters had hoped none of the 120 anti-LGBT bills pending before state legislatures this year would make it into law. Now that Fallin has signed the anti-LGBT adoption bill, those hopes are dashed.

Troy Stevenson, Executive Director of Freedom Oklahoma, said he’s “deeply disappointed” Fallin signed the measure, but is “more concerned about the children — desperately looking for homes — that will be harmed by this disgraceful legislation.”

“And the countless young people who will be stigmatized by state sanctioned hate,” Stevenson added. “Make no mistake, we will fight for the most vulnerable Oklahomans targeted by this bill.”

Stevenson also told the Blade LGBT rights supporters plan to file a federal lawsuit challenging the new Oklahoma anti-LGBT law.

“We are going to litigate,” Stevenson said. “I met with our attorneys [Friday] night, and will meet with our national coalition and the broader legal team on Monday. We will be announcing something early next week.”

An opponent of same-sex marriage, Fallin has an anti-LGBT history as governor of Oklahoma. When the Obama administration ordered the U.S. military to provide spousal benefits to service members in same-sex marriages, Fallin said the Oklahoma National Guard would stop processing benefits for couples — gay and straight. Only after the Obama administration threatened a loss of federal funds to state withholding those benefits did Fallin agree to a deal enabling same-sex couples to obtain them.

Lucas Acosta, LGBT media director for the Democratic National Committee, predicted Oklahoma residents would hold Republicans and Fallin accountable at the polls for enacting SB 1140 — pointing to recent unexpected victories for Democrats in Oklahoma during special elections.

“With over 400,000 children in foster care nationwide, including more than 16,000 in Oklahoma alone, the Oklahoma legislature should be focusing on how it can attract more qualified and loving parents to the system — not rejecting potential homes based on the gender identity or sexual orientation of the parents,” Acosta said.

Before Fallin signed SB 1140, the legislation wasn’t the only state anti-LGBT adoption bill headed toward becoming law. In Kansas, the state legislature has sent Senate Bill 284 to the desk of Gov. Jeff Coyler, who’s also expected to sign the measure despite opposition from LGBT groups.

Currey Cook, counsel and director for the Youth in Out-of-Home Care Project at Lambda Legal, urged Coyler not to follow Fallin’s lead and veto the anti-LGBT adoption bill pending before him.

“We hope that other governors, most immediately Kansas Gov. Coyler, will not follow Oklahoma’s example and will put the needs of the child first,” Coyler said. “To deny qualified parents eager to foster or adopt children in need of loving homes because of their sexual orientation or gender-identity or particular religious belief is not only wrong, but impacts the most vulnerable the most.”

LANSING — Planned Parenthood Advocates of Michigan (PPAM) announced its endorsement of Dana Nessel for Michigan Attorney General. Nessel, a noted civil rights attorney and former Assistant Wayne County Prosecutor, has worked “tirelessly to protect the people who need it most over her 25-year legal career,” said PPAM.

“We’ve weathered some brutal attacks on women’s access to vital reproductive health care over the past few years, and it’s time Michigan’s women and families had an Attorney General who used their power to protect our rights instead of chipping away at them,” said PPAM President and CEO Lori Carpentier. “Dana Nessel has spent her entire career fighting – and winning – on behalf of the people who need it most. The people of Michigan need Dana in office, fighting for us, and that’s why we are thrilled to endorse her.”

Perhaps Nessel’s most noted case is that of a same-sex couple who wanted to adopt their foster children. That case, DeBoer v. Snyder, successfully overturned Michigan’s ban on gay adoption and was consolidated into the landmark Supreme Court case that legalized same-sex marriage nationwide.

“For far too long, the people of Michigan haven’t had an Attorney General on their side,” Nessel said. “Bill Schuette has spent his time as AG using the power of his office to undermine women’s constitutionally protected right to access safe, legal abortion, and to restrict access to basic health care for thousands of Michiganders. It is my honor to accept the endorsement of Planned Parenthood Advocates of Michigan, and with it the responsibility of protecting all Michiganders from harm.”

PPAM is the advocacy arm of Planned Parenthood of Michigan. PPAM works in conjunction with Planned Parenthood Federation of America and Planned Parenthood Action Fund at the national level, as well as our health center/education affiliate Planned Parenthood of Michigan, supporters and patients at the state level to ensure access to reproductive health for all Michiganders.

had a tarot reading last Sunday by a psychic friend of Sr. Serena Scatterpin.

“She’s a marvel and a looker,” was Sister’s intro. “If just a tad off her ever-lovin’ spiritual rocker.”

Glad that the holidays are over – and finding myself 40 pounds fruit cake heavier, I was intrigued – I have a persistent fondness for ever-lovin’ rockers.

Tarot reader Lady Novena Knightly – 6’7” in flats – self identifies as a pre-op recovering catholic and bisexual drag queen in hetero remission.

She works at a popular bistro that caters to all psychic types – some short in crew socks, some tall in high heels – who themselves are, or who need to be, in remission: mentally, monetarily or morally.

She’s also Sister’s makeup advisor and frequent fashionista euchre partner (Father Manly Evergrope, Sister’s on-again, off-again escort, prefers hands-on video games and late-night, non-fashionista Stud Poker playoffs.)

My reading took place in the Convent of the Renegade Sisters of Mary multimedia room. A five-buck love offering was suggested, for which I got a taped reading, a bracing cup of essence of yohimba tea, and a seven-chakra, let’s-get-really-acquainted, digital tappy tap.

“I see contradictory things in your spread,” began Lady Novena. “You bottomed out last year, but 2009 will see you on top for a goal setting. Her hips beatifically redolent of metaphoric marathons yet to come – or, something like that.

“What did you think?” asked Sr. Scatterpin. “Did the tarot cards have you pegged?”

“Sis, I haven’t had a back rub like that in ages! And that cup of oolong tea worked wonders. You might get the Renegade Sisters to bottle it,” I said. “One question, ‘tho. What’s this about Lady Novena being a tad off her spiritual rocker?”

“Well, just between us RC girls. Lady Novena says she gets dressing room visits at odd times from the Virgin Mary,” she said. “She claims the BVM visited her the year she turned 21, inspiring her eventually to go into show business. If you can believe that.”

“Who knows, Sister? Heaven works in mysterious ways its wonders to perform. What does Father Evergrope say?”

For this remarkable reading I generously purchased three packets of RSM-marketed Lights Out for Brotherly Love incense.

To say Lady Novena (aka, one-time IRS accountant Dudley Brownberry, Jr.) is striking is, well, understatement. She’s a towering presence and, obvious to all who meet her, she’s been around the parish block a few times. Her calves are angelically well-honed. Her thighs, heavenly suggestive of enterprising goal setting. Her hips beatifically redolent of metaphoric marathons yet to come – or, something like that.

“Sis, I haven’t had a back rub like that in ages! And that cup of oolong tea worked wonders. You might get the Renegade Sisters to bottle it,” I said. “One question, ‘tho. What’s this about Lady Novena being a tad off her spiritual rocker?”

“Weel, just between us RC girls. Lady Novena says she gets dressing room visits at odd times from the Virgin Mary,” she said. “She claims the BVM visited her the year she turned 21, inspiring her eventually to go into show business. If you can believe that.”

“Who knows, Sister? Heaven works in mysterious ways its wonders to perform. What does Father Evergrope say?”

“Evergrope says that if Lady Novena thinks she’s getting visitations and it helps her drag queen performances, what’s the harm?” she said. “The problem’s that Pope Benedict XVI’s just decreed that overlaying a collection of bones, nerves and other squishy bits – is just the container of our consciousness - and while we may opt to adapt their bodies to align with their minds, but they truly are the gender they sense within themselves. This is why it is so disingenuous when people try to mock trans people by claiming we can simply decided one day to change our genders out of the blue, or that we might do so to gain entry into a changing facility or restroom.

A majority of us may well spend years of our lives, starting as a child, grappling with feelings of wrongness. We may not exactly have a handle on what the issue is, especially if we grow up in situations where information on being trans is hard to come by – but we know there is something.

It’s one of the bitter realizations I think many of us go through, too: we may fight for years of our lives, feeling that maybe were just not being man or woman “enough” in our day to day lives. I’ve known more than my share of people who shoehorned themselves into the most stereotypical expressions of the gender they were assigned at birth, hoping it would somehow “cure” them of feeling as they do – only to discover that it intensified the feelings of innate “wrongness” they felt.

While the access to information and support is changing...
To compare, imagine what it is like to have to hear, again and again, that one doesn’t need to be gay, or that one simple “hasn’t found the right man/woman,” or all of that claptrap? This is what its like for transgender people to have their identities reduced to their physical bodies, and be told that this collection of cells is who we are no matter what we may think.

things, for some it’s years, even decades, before we’re able to truly be ourselves – and when we finally do come out, we face rejection, discrimination and derision for doing so. Our very being is called into question, based in large part of the body we inhabit.

To compare, imagine what it is like to have to hear, again and again, that one doesn’t need to be gay, or that one simple “hasn’t found the right man/woman,” or all of that claptrap? This is what its like for transgender people to have their identities reduced to their physical bodies, and be told that this collection of cells is who we are no matter what we may think.

Not too long ago, I decided to try a simple experiment. I opened a poll on my Twitter account. Now, I’m not going to try and claim that such a thing is in any way scientific, particularly given the relatively small sample size and otherwise non-controlled aspect of such a thing. Nevertheless, I found it interesting to get a small sample of my friends to give some feedback.

First, I asked my non-transgender friends to think about photos of themselves from 10 or more years ago, and tell me if the person in those shots still feels like them. Then I asked my trans friends about photos of themselves from pre-transition years, and if they felt that person was them.

Unsurprisingly, to me, the transgender people on my timeline pretty overwhelmingly (71 percent) said that that pre-transition person they saw in old photos did not feel like them, with an additional 24 percent willing to say that they sort of felt it was. Meanwhile, half of the non-transgender folks were more willing to say that it sort of was, with roughly a third saying that those old photos certainly felt like them.

When I look at old photos of myself, I remember the time and place. I recall the experience just like anyone else - but it’s more like looking at a picture of someone else, not me. I’m not delusional, and do understand the reality of the picture in question – but there is a huge disconnect between what I see, and how I feel about it. It’s just not “me” per se.

That’s how this feels. We may know the realities of our physical selves – sometimes all too well – while knowing that the essence of our beings is something quite different. To paraphrase a friend of mine, while many might look into a mirror and be dismayed by a gray hair, a pimple, or some crow’s feet, we may see a face and figure staring back at us that feels distinctly wrong, and that disunion between who we perceive ourselves and what we see staring back in the mirror is so often at the heart of the dysphoria a transgender person struggles with.

This is why that simple notion of us being men or women who become women or men just doesn’t fit. We are what we are, and we may take steps to express that better, and to literally feel like we belong in our own skins.

“It’s one way of getting 15 minutes of fame, I suppose, Sister. It certainly beats having stigmatism. And a lot less messier, too,” I said. “Come to think of it, as far back as I can remember there’s never been a drag queen with stigmatism. At least outside of the Castro or New York’s club baths. But, who knows? Could be a first for LGBT Michigan.”

“If I were the BVM,” sighed Sister Scatterpin, herself a now-and-then virgin.

“I’d really make it a first for all parties concerned, including fundygelical-du-jour Rick Warren. A 15-second cameo appearance in DC at Obama’s inaugural, well, what can I say? The Republicans would go bonkers. The pope apoplectic. That’s show biz!”

Creep of the Week

Donald Trump

Being in prison sucks. Granted, I have never been in prison, but one doesn’t actually have to spend time behind bars to know it’s awful. I’ve been conditioned my entire life to recognize that prison is not somewhere I ever want to go. And so it’s a pretty good motivator to be a law-abiding citizen (recognizing, of course, that being a cisgender white woman gives me plenty of unearned and unfair advantage).

There is, unfortunately, a perception in America that prison should be horrific. The more horrible the better. We have a very punitive prison justice system. The goal of putting people in prison is to punish them, not rehabilitate them. We want people who break the law to suffer (unless those people are white and have lots of money. Those people apparently get to be president).

And boy do we love to lock people up. The United States has the largest prison population in the world. I’m not talking per capita, I mean total. We’re #1. We also love to try children as adults and put them in adult prisons. Which is sick.

But for those of us not in prison, it’s really easy to say something like, “If you can’t do the time don’t do the crime” and “It’s prison, it’s not supposed to be a resort.”

It’s easy to forget that the people in prison are, well, people. They are human beings. So you can imagine that it’s especially hard for trans men and women to be in prison. Because even trans folks who are NOT in prison have to constantly defend their very humanity against constant assaults.

The Trump administration has been a disaster for transgender people. For such an already marginalized and relatively small group, they’ve sure been singled out for harm by this administration. All of the gains made for trans rights under Obama are being rolled back for no other reason than that the Trump administration doesn’t like people and they don’t like black people and they’ll be damned if they let a black guy tell them how they should treat trans folks. And so we’ve seen direct attacks on transgender service members and transgender students from Trump and company. And now it’s prisoners.

Unlike service members and students, prisoners don’t have the advantage of being part of a group that many people like or even admire. They have few advocates in actual power. Transgender prisoners are the most marginalized of the already marginalized.

Which is probably why the Trump administration decided to undo rules put in place during the Obama Presidency that allowed trans prisoners to be housed in facilities that aligned with their gender identity. In other words, if you are a transgender woman, you shouldn’t be thrown into a men’s prison. For obvious reasons. But in case those reasons aren’t obvious, the intention behind the rules was to protect trans prisoners from sexual and physical assault.

The change was prompted by a lawsuit brought by four evangelical Christian prisoners in Texas. These women argued that being housed with “men” (as they refuse to acknowledge or accept trans identity) put them at risk and made them feel “icky” (that’s a legal term, obviously). And Trump and his ilk were more than happy to throw trans inmates to the wolves.

This has, not surprisingly, drawn criticism from the LGBTQ community.

“One can find it hard to express that the administration is “turning their backs” on transgender people. After all, in order to turn away from someone you have to acknowledge they exist in the first place. Instead, Trump and his minions want to erase them entirely. As for “deliberate recipe for violence against transgender people based in inexcusable prejudice.”

While I agree with Saenz, I don’t really think it’s accurate to say that the administration is “turning their backs” on transgender people. After all, in order to turn away from someone you have to acknowledge they exist in the first place. Instead, Trump and his minions want to erase them entirely. As for “deliberate recipe for violence against transgender people based in inexcusable prejudice.”

All of the gains made for trans rights under Obama are being rolled back for no other reason than that the Trump administration doesn’t like trans people and they don’t like black people and they’ll be damned if they let a black guy tell them how they should treat trans folks.
President Trump’s new initiative to support faith-based organizations with federal assistance is stirring unease among LGBT rights supporters, who say they’ll keep watch to ensure the program doesn’t enable anti-LGBT discrimination.

Trump, who created the initiative by executive order on May 3 on the National Day of Prayer, said during a signing ceremony in the White House Rose Garden the program “will help design new policies that recognize the vital role of faith in our families, our communities, and our great country.”

“This office will also help ensure that faith-based organizations have equal access to government funding and the equal right to exercise their deeply held beliefs,” Trump said. “We take this step because we know that, in solving the many, many problems and our great challenges, faith is more powerful than government, and nothing is more powerful than God.”

Among those present for the ceremony were Vice President Mike Pence; Jean Bingham, general president of the Relief Society for the Mormon Church; Archbishop of Washington Cardinal Donald Wuerl; and Narayanachar Digalakote, priest at the Sri Siva Vishnu Temple in Lanham, Md.

The executive order renames as the White House Faith & Opportunity Initiative the program known under the Obama administration as the Office of Faith-Based & Community Initiatives.

According to the White House, the initiative will provide policy recommendations for the administration’s faith-based and community programs, such as ideas on helping these programs deliver more effective solutions to combat poverty.

The initiative is also charged with apprising the administration of any failures within the executive branch in complying with “religious freedom” protections – a term often used to mean anti-LGBT discrimination – and to reduce the burdens on the exercise of free religion.

Tony Perkins, president of the anti-LGBT Family Research Council, praised Trump in a statement.

“The announcement of President Trump’s faith initiative is further evidence that this administration is not only committed to protecting our First Freedom but is also acknowledging that our faith in God contributes to the guidance and well-being of our country,” Perkins said.

The Obama-era program was itself a restructuring of a program established in 2001 during the administration of George W. Bush. The Bush-era program was criticized as a potential violation of the Establishment Clause and as a payoff to faith leaders to encourage support for Bush’s presidency and re-election in 2004, which may be Trump’s aims as well as the congressional mid-term elections approach.

Trump signs his executive order creating the initiative on the anniversary of a “religious freedom” executive order he signed last year. That order was criticized by LGBT rights supporters because it directed U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions to create “religious freedom” guidance seen to enable anti-LGBT discrimination under the law.

The new initiative also echoes the creation of the Conscience & Religious Freedom Division at the Department of Health & Human Services. Critics say that division will enable medical practitioners to deny services to women seeking abortions or transgender people seeking transition-related care, including gender reassignment surgery.

Although LGBT rights supporters weren’t ready to pounce on the new Trump initiative, they expressed concern about the program and said they were wary of its impact.

Daniel Mach, director of the American Civil Liberties Union’s program on freedom of religion and belief, said in a statement the new initiative must not direct taxpayer money to organizations that discriminate against LGBT people.

“Freedom of religion is one of our most fundamental and cherished rights. But that freedom does not give any of us the right to harm other people, to impose our beliefs on others, or to discriminate,” Mach said. “The ACLU will be watching this initiative closely to ensure that it does not promote policies that violate these core principles.”

Sharon McGowan, director of strategy for Lambda Legal, said, “there isn’t a lot of substance” in the executive order, but it reeks of earlier Trump administration efforts enabling anti-LGBT discrimination in the name of “religious freedom.”

“As we saw in the proposed rule coming out of HHS last January, this administration thinks that it burdens someone’s religious belief to have to provide appropriate health care to a trans person, or even to make a referral to someone who will,” McGowan said. “This EO is very much of a piece with last year’s EO, Jeff Sessions’ proclamation from last fall, and what’s come out of HHS.”

McGowan said the executive order is also consistent with Sessions’ pledge to the anti-LGBT Alliance Defending Freedom to restructure the federal government to favor religious freedom even at the expense of protecting others from discrimination.

“So while there isn’t really much in here that’s new, it is another piece of the larger structure that this administration is building to weaponize religion,” McGowan said. “Faith doesn’t have to be synonymous with discrimination, but that certainly seems to be what this administration means.”

Kasey Suffredini, president of strategy at Freedom for All Americans, went a step further and said the initiative makes religion “a tool to cause harm.”

“By allowing agencies that receive taxpayer dollars to discriminate against LGBTQ people as long as they cite religion as the reason for doing so, this administration has weaponized religion in a way that prioritizes anti-LGBTQ bias over vulnerable children finding loving homes,” Suffredini said. “President Trump’s continued attacks on LGBTQ families hurt everyone – and they will not stand.”

Islamophobia

But that alleged merit in his policy solutions should be clouded over by his blatant Islamophobia and outright drive for a Christian government. This straddles the transparency issue a little because Colbeck was upset that Buzzfeed News reported on his claims that Muslims were undertaking a “civilization jihad” to impose sharia in America.

In the speech highlighted by Buzzfeed, he claimed El-Sayed was part of this modern day boogeyman conspiracy. The Detroit News called his “evidence” thin, at best.

“They have no ill will toward Muslims,” Colbeck told the gathering of journalists. “Regards to Dr. Abdul El-Sayed, you’ve got an handfull of affiliation with Muslim Students’ Association, which has been identified as an affiliated organization in that Explanatory Memorandum. And if you guys go off and look at Muslim Students’ Association across the nation, you’ll find that they’ve had Al-Qaeda leaders speaking to their people, and they’ve also found out that... So there’s some serious concerns around that, and frankly, this is one of those areas that got me ticked off in regard to the fairness of the media. They pitch this as a concern around concerns around ties to the Muslim Brotherhood as a concern with Muslims in general.”

Each of the candidates were asked if they thought sharia was a threat to Michigan or America. Interestingly, the GOP candidates noted that the courts understood their role and would never impose it. But the Democrats grasped on the question and Colbeck’s role in promoting it alongside Kamal Saleem, whose claims to have been a member of the Muslim Brotherhood before converting to Christianity are questionable at best.

Thanedar called it “bigotry.” Whitmer went further.

“I’m really horrified that so many people use issues like this to divide us,” she said. “The greatest strength of our state is the rich diversity of our state. We want to make sure that this is a place that people come to for opportunity so we can diversify our economy.”

While talking about his compliance with FOIA and the legislature and the governor’s office.

But here is where Schuette, again, fell short. While talking about his compliance with FOIA as attorney general, he failed to note that he is currently being sued by Progress Michigan, a liberal activist group, for using private emails to avoid FOIA.

This division and hammering by Schuette and Calley on each other could result in a door opening for Colbeck to garner the nomination of the GOP come August. He’s a relatively unknown statewide, and as a former, literal, rocket scientist, presents some policy solutions the Detroit News has said have merit.

cannot put out a financial disclosure form because he put all of his assets into a blind trust, that’s been the story. But, it appears that though, we’ve been directing the purchase transfer of millions of dollars in offshore assets while attorney general.”

Schuette declared he’d happily release his tax returns, but was refusing to fill out a federal disclosure form. Calley jumped on that, noting it was likely because Schuette’s assets were supposed to be in a blind trust and without his involvement. Calley raised the issue of millions of dollars of property owned by a company listed at Schuette’s Midland address. The property is located in the U.S. Virgin Islands and has been sold.

Crains Detroit reported that not only had it been sold, but that Schuette used employees of the attorney general’s office to witness and notarize the property transaction paperwork. Schuette has also been under pressure for allegedly hiring political operatives on the state’s dime.

Schuette denied the allegations, calling Calley “desperate.”

“Now listen, Brian you go around the state,” Schuette said. “You go around the state making false accusations that are not true. All my assets are in a blind trust, I comply with that fully and completely. And I’ve released my income taxes for the last seven years, I do so again this eighth year as attorney general. And you’re so desperate, you’re so behind there’s nothing you won’t do to try to make false accusations and attacks.”

Another contention was the issue of FOIA application. The candidates all said they supported extending the law, which allows citizens to access government documents, to the legislature and the governor’s office.

But here is where Schuette, again, fell short. While talking about his compliance with FOIA as attorney general, he failed to note that he is currently being sued by Progress Michigan, a liberal activist group, for using private emails to avoid FOIA.

This division and hammering by Schuette and Calley on each other could result in a door opening for Colbeck to garner the nomination of the GOP come August. He’s a relatively unknown statewide, and as a former, literal, rocket scientist, presents some policy solutions the Detroit News has said have merit.

Report Shows Support For Same-Sex Marriage Isn’t Unanimous

A majority of conservative Republicans (58 percent), Republicans overall (51 percent), Mormons (53 percent), white evangelical Protestants (58 percent) and adults in Alabama (51 percent) oppose same-sex marriage, according to a survey released last week by the Public Religion Research Institute.

The PRRI survey, which relied on more than 40,000 interviews nationwide conducted in 2017, made a lot of headlines for finding substantial gains in the number of Americans who support same-sex marriage over the past few years. Overall, 61 percent of Americans say gay and lesbian couples should be legally allowed to marry, compared with 52 percent in a 2013 survey conducted by PRRI and the Brookings Institution. Only 30 percent are opposed to legal same-sex marriage, while the other 9 percent said they didn’t know or declined to give an answer.

A majority of black people (52 percent), Hispanics (61 percent) and white people (63 percent) back same-sex marriage. The majority of people in all but six states support it. And even in those six states — Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee and West Virginia — only in Alabama are opponents an outright majority.

PRRI also asked Americans whether they support small businesses being able to deny services to gay or lesbian people if doing so would conflict with the business owner’s religious beliefs. Overall, 33 percent of Americans support that idea, while 60 percent oppose it. The majority of conservative Republicans (59 percent), Republicans overall (52 percent), Mormons (53 percent) and white evangelical Protestants (53 percent) support such religious-based denials of services.

According to Perry Bacon Jr.’s analysis in FiveThirtyEight, the headlines touting the widening acceptance of same-sex marriage weren’t wrong. But he said he thinks it’s worth looking closely at the 39 percent of Americans who don’t support same-sex marriage, including the 30 percent who outright oppose it. “That group really matters because it includes a majority bloc in the Republican Party, which dominates U.S. politics nationally and in many states. They haven’t exactly given up on this issue — the question of same-sex marriage itself has become less of a political football, but LGBT rights more generally may be taking its place,” he said.

In short, the legal debate over same-sex marriage is over. But, according to Bacon Jr., questions about the cultural and political acceptance of same-sex marriage and other LGBT rights endure.

LGBTQ Couples Shake Up Gender Norms in Wedding Industry

Traditional weddings are deeply rooted in gender-based rituals, but the growing LGBTQ wedding industry is reimagining that. Many couples are engaging with centuries of tradition but crafting their own way to the altar.

“Structurally, what is required in the wedding planning process is the same,” says Kathryn Hamm, an education and diversity specialist at WeddingWire.com, “but because traditionally speaking, the gender roles in weddings are so deeply engrained, there is a very concrete necessity for two grooms or two brides to figure out how to plan within that schema.”

So how is it decided who does what in LGBTQ weddings?

Unsurprisingly, there’s no single answer. Because they can’t adhere to gender norms, LGBTQ couples can be creative. Many are putting a new focus on equality between the two people getting married.

“It’s very freeing from the idea that there are these rules, and you must do this and you must do that,” says Kirsten Palladino, founder of the LGBTQ wedding website EquallyWed.com. Among the innovations Palladino has seen are trains sewn into grooms’ tuxedos, drag-queen flower girls, and a double aisle, so both marriers can walk at once and “not one of them comes first or second,” she says.

Proposals are planned based on what makes sense for the couple. Lib Tietjen and Claire Skrivanos, who married in Fairlee, Vermont, in May 2017, purchased their engagement rings together. Tietjen later proposed to Skrivanos, beating her by a week in what they deemed a friendly competition for who would pop the question first.

“I hadn’t really occurred to me how engrained the script of a wedding was,” says Tietjen. “There was something really freeing and also really terrifying about knowing you got to do an entirely different script.”

In their wedding, Tietjen and Skrivanos didn’t want it to appear that either of them was playing the man’s or woman’s role. “We walked down the aisle together,” Tietjen says. “We didn’t want our fathers to give us away. No one was giving us to anyone. We were giving ourselves to each other.”

PJ Painter and Ryan Bedinghaus, who will marry in August in Louisville, Kentucky, have similar concerns and hope to avoid any illusion of gender roles in their ceremony. “I think there’s a general mindset that whoever is in the lighter color clothing is the woman in the relationship,” says Painter, “which we obviously don’t want to portray because there is no woman in our relationship. So we decided to wear the same color suit.”

Painter and Bedinghaus will have three aisles: the middle one for their wedding party, and two outer aisles they will walk down at the same time. They will have both men and women standing up for them.

Hamm says the trend of mixed-gender wedding parties is growing in heterosexual weddings as well as LGBTQ ones. According to WeddingWire, the number of straight couples divorcing weddings by gender has dropped 14 percent since 2015. “To me,” Hamm says, “This is a really clear example of straight people attending same-sex weddings and saying, ‘I can do that too.’”

Stripping away gender norms, however, doesn’t necessarily mean tossing out tradition. Plenty of LGBTQ couples still want traditional weddings. For instance, Palladino says, “a mother-son dance is maybe just a parent-child dance.”

“I think straight readers would be surprised just how traditional most LGBTQ couples are,” she says. “They’re just two people committing their lives to one another in front of the people they love and respect.”

And LGBTQ weddings are contributing to a trend in which many couples of all sexualities are thinking hard about the reasons behind rituals. Millennials as a whole have shown a strong desire for more customized weddings, industry experts say, although planning a traditional wedding also remains popular. “We just want people to have a choice,” Hamm says.

If you peruse Google for what LGBTQ couples are asking about their weddings and engagements, you’ll find inquiries like, do gay men wear engagement rings? How do you know who proposes? Who pays for what?

Hamm’s advice is the same for both heterosexual and LGBTQ couples: Do what you want. Palladino agrees. “The only thing you must do is send out thank you notes,” she says. “Everything else is up to you.”

LANSING – Volunteers and campaign leadership urged the Board of State Canvassers to certify the Voters Not Politicians proposal for the November ballot at a meeting in the State Capitol on Thursday, May 10, which would establish a transparent process to prevent manipulation of legislative and congressional district lines for political purposes.

“We remain optimistic that the Board of State canvassers will quickly move to certify our proposal for the November ballot so the voters have a chance to decide on this important reform for our democracy,” said Katie Fahey, founder and executive director of Voters Not Politicians. “It’s clear that the people of Michigan are eager to enact meaningful reform that will make our government more transparent and accountable so we can solve some of our state’s biggest challenges like repairing our infrastructure, ensuring safe drinking water and making sure every child receives a high quality education.”

The all-volunteer petition collection effort culminated in turning in more than 425,000 signatures collected in 110 days representing each of Michigan’s 83 counties to the Bureau of Elections on Monday, Dec. 18, 2017, more than 140 days ago.

The Bureau of Elections staff found – and campaign consultants at Practical Political Consulting confirmed – that more than 92 percent of signatures reviewed were valid, which means the campaign collected over 100,000 more signatures than required under state law. No challenges have been brought against the signatures themselves.

The Board of State Canvasser website says regarding constitutional initiatives, “If the petition is determined to contain a sufficient number of valid signatures by the Board of State Canvassers, the proposed amendment is placed on the next general election ballot for the consideration of the state’s voters.”

“We have the signatures. They have been verified. They are not challenged. We expect the board to put the measure on the November ballot at its next meeting,” said Jim Lancaster, campaign counsel for Voters Not Politicians. “The people of Michigan deserve a chance to end our current redistricting process, which allows politicians working behind closed doors to manipulate districts to their personal and partisan benefit, and replace it with an open, citizen-driven process.”

LANSING – The Michigan Department of Health and Human Services (MDHHS) is encouraging Michigan residents to protect themselves from ticks as the warm weather approaches. Tick-borne diseases, particularly Lyme disease, are expanding across the state.

Although ticks can spread multiple illnesses, Lyme disease is the most commonly reported tick-borne disease in Michigan. Lyme disease is caused by the bacterium Borrelia burgdorferi and is transmitted by the blacklegged or deer tick.

The blacklegged tick is well-established in Michigan’s western Upper and Lower Peninsulas. However, it is expanding into new areas across the Lower Peninsula. In 2017, there were more than 300 human cases of Lyme disease reported, and approximately two out of three cases reported exposure in Michigan. Lyme disease-infected ticks have currently been identified in 34 of Michigan’s 83 counties. Information about Lyme disease risk by county is available at Michigan.gov/lyme.

“With the expansion of blacklegged ticks into new areas in Michigan, the best way to protect against Lyme disease is to prevent tick bites,” said Dr. Eden Wells, MDHHS chief medical executive. “If you find a tick attached to your body, promptly remove it. Monitor your health, and if you experience fever, rash, muscle or joint aches or other symptoms, consult with your medical provider.”

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) reported last week that diseases spread by mosquitoes, ticks and fleas tripled in the U.S. from 2004 to 2016. The report also concludes that Lyme disease is an increasing concern for Michigan. To read the full report, visit the CDC website at cdc.gov.

People can protect themselves against Lyme disease and other tick-borne diseases by following these tips:

- Avoid tick-infested areas.
- Walk in the center of trails to avoid contact with overgrown grass, brush and leaf litter at trail edges.
- Protect your pets too. Dogs and cats can come into contact with ticks outdoors and bring them into the home, so using tick prevention products on pets is also recommended.
- Use insect repellent.
- Apply repellent containing DEET (20 to 30 percent) or Picaridin on exposed skin.
- Treat clothes (especially pants, socks and shoes) with permethrin, which kills ticks on contact or buy clothes that are pre-treated. Do not use permethrin directly on skin.
- Always follow the manufacturer’s instructions when applying repellents.
- Perform daily tick checks.
- Always check for ticks on yourself and your animals after being outdoors, even in your own yard.
- Inspect all body surfaces carefully, and remove attached ticks with tweezers.

- To remove a tick, grasp the tick firmly and as closely to the skin as possible. With a steady motion, pull the tick’s body away from the skin. Cleanse the area with an antiseptic.
- Bathe or shower.
- Bathe or shower as soon as possible after coming indoors (preferably within two hours) to wash off and more easily find ticks that are crawling on you.
- Washing clothing in hot water and drying on high heat will kill ticks in clothing.

Michigan citizens can submit ticks to MDHHS for identification and possible Lyme disease testing, free of charge. Or residents can send electronic photos of ticks to the MDHHS for identification to MDHHS-Bugs@michigan.gov. For more information on how to submit your tick and/or photos, visit Michigan.gov/lyme. For more information about Lyme disease, visit Cdc.gov/lyme or Michigan.gov/lyme.

I don’t mind being recognized at all. I don’t mind it. But if I could go somewhere right now, I would wanna go to Maui. Just a vacation. Get some sun. Doing “Dancing with the Stars,” it definitely changed my skin tone—due to, like, sprays, not sun.

Do you expect there will be a day when an openly gay figure skater can just be a figure skater?

Yeah. And I think more than that, I hope there’s a day that an openly gay Olympian will just be an Olympian. But I think that right now it’s important to share your story. It’s important for everybody to share your story, especially in a day and age when an athlete can go to the Olympics and you can be like, oh, let me know a little bit more about that athlete. You go on their social media page, you know what their likes are, you know what they’re doing, you know where they are, you know what their interests are; you can just so easily find out information about everybody that I think it’s important to show the world who you are, what you stand for, and what’s important to you.

For me, it’s not being gay that I share—I share my coming out because it was really liberating for me, and when I came out, when I was able to share that, that’s what I found so much power in. It wasn’t like, “Oh, I’m gay and I’m powerful”—which is, like, so true—but it was my coming out experience of when I started to really own who I was and that’s where I found a lot of power. I was always me, but I didn’t always own it. And when I owned it, that’s when I found that I was my strongest.

Have you had any particularly moving exchanges with young queer fans?

Yes. There have been many. I’ve run into a few young people who told me that they tried to kill themselves at one point, which is incredibly hard to hear, especially from really young kids. It’s incredibly bizarre to be thanked for just being who you are, and for someone to tell you that you really helped them. It’s incredibly humbling, but I can tell you that I was not expecting that kind of response after the Olympics.

Is there a responsibility or pressure on you to act or be a certain way because of that?

No more than the way that I’ve been acting.

Good to end, which Golden Girl are you?

Probably Blanche. Isn’t everyone Blanche? And I’m a little—OK, I’m mostly Dorothy.

It’s the snark.

It is the snark.

Detroit LGBTQ Activist Cornelius Wilson to Receive Senior Citizen of the Year Award

BY BTL STAFF

In recognition of over two decades of service as an LGBTQ rights advocate, SAGE Metro Detroit has announced that board member Cornelius Wilson will receive Michigan’s Aging and Adult Services Agency’s (AASA) Senior Citizen of the Year Award.

During a special Older Michiganians Day ceremony at the State Capitol in Lansing on May 16, Wilson will receive the award with congratulatory recognition from Gov. Rick Snyder and a $500 check from Consumer’s Energy. Each year, AASA, under the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services, grants the Senior Citizen of the Year Award to someone 60 years or older for outstanding volunteerism and contributions to their local community.

Wilson was nominated by SAGE Metro Detroit for the award because of his activism on behalf of LGBT older adults, community leadership and years of dedicated service in HIV/AIDS education and prevention.

“It is a distinct honor to be recognized by this award, and I share that recognition with the countless LGBT activists and allies who have laid the groundwork before me,” said Wilson, who works as a housing case manager at the Detroit Department of Health and Human Services. “I always felt like the struggles I face as a black, same-gender-loving man would inevitably impact other black men and the African-American community as a whole. Our folks, all folks, needed to see and witness the impact of positive affirmation that extends from our LGBT and now Q community. I hope this award, along with the other people who have received it, will continue to inspire people my age to get involved and be living proof that activism is ageless.”

In addition to his involvement in advocating for LGBT rights and social work in metro Detroit, Wilson plays a significant role in galvanizing community engagement through events. He chairs the annual Hotter Than July festival in Detroit, the second oldest Black LGBT pride event in the world, and serves as SAGE Metro Detroit’s treasurer, programming chair, finance committee chair and chair of the annual LGBT Older Adult Summit held each June, now in its eighth year.

“Cornelius has been an indispensable volunteer and cheerleader for SAGE Metro Detroit since our founding in 2015,” said Angie Perone, director of SAGE Metro Detroit. “As programming chair, Cornelius works with diverse communities throughout Southeast Michigan to plan programs and events for SAGE Metro Detroit, including museum outings, discussion groups, town hall forums on policy issues and caregiving classes — among other programs.”

She continued, “It is impossible to quantify the countless hours community leaders like Cornelius commit to our work. This award is a special opportunity for SAGE and other community members to say thank you, Cornelius, for all you do.”

SAGE Metro Detroit was established in 2015 after five years as the LGBT Older Adult Coalition. They are dedicated to, “Building awareness and promoting change so that lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) older adults may age with dignity and authenticity.”

SAGE Metro primarily serves Macomb, Oakland, Washtenaw and Wayne counties in southeast Michigan but have worked with LGBT communities, caregivers, service providers and allies throughout Michigan.

Holland’s Out On The Lakeshore LGBTQ Center Celebrates First Year

BY BTL STAFF

Out On The Lakeshore will celebrate the one-year anniversary of its community center located at 451 Columbia Ave., with an open house from 6 to 8 p.m. on Thursday, May 31.

The OOTL Community Center opened last May to provide a place for LGBTQ residents and their allies to meet and feel safe. It has provided numerous educational and training programs as well as providing programs and outreach for youth.

Because of its expanding programs and services, it moved from the north end of the building at 451 Columbia Ave., to a larger space at the south end in February.

“Some of what’s happening is we’re becoming more a resource to the community than we originally thought we would be,” noted the Rev. Jen Adams, an OOTL board member. “Just our existing has brought people to us that I didn’t think would be connecting with us. It’s grown in ways we didn’t expect.”

The center is open to the public from 5 to 7 p.m. every Tuesday and 3 to 6 p.m. every Thursday. Among some of the programs hosted by the center have been a focus group on homeless youth, area schools’ Gay/Straight Alliance events, pop-up hours the second Monday of every month by Michigan Equality’s Department of Victim Services and a Gender SAFE support group.

Refreshments will be served at the free Open House. For more information contact Jim Larkin at 616-610-9891, or go online to outonthe lakeshore.org.

In adults with HIV on ART who have diarrhea not caused by an infection

Tired of planning your life around diarrhea?

Enough is Enough

Mytesi (crofelemer):
- Is the only medicine FDA-approved to relieve diarrhea in people with HIV
- Treats diarrhea differently by normalizing the flow of water in the GI tract
- Has the same or fewer side effects as placebo in clinical studies
- Comes from a tree sustainably harvested in the Amazon Rainforest

What is Mytesi?
Mytesi is a prescription medicine that helps relieve symptoms of diarrhea not caused by an infection (noninfectious) in adults living with HIV/AIDS on antiretroviral therapy (ART).

Important Safety Information
Mytesi is not approved to treat infectious diarrhea (diarrhea caused by bacteria, a virus, or a parasite). Before starting you on Mytesi, your healthcare provider will first be sure that you do not have infectious diarrhea. Otherwise, there is a risk you would not receive the right medicine and your infection could get worse. In clinical studies, the most common side effects that occurred more often than with placebo were upper respiratory tract (sinus, nose, and throat) infection (5.7%), bronchitis (3.9%), cough (3.5%), flatulence (3.1%), and increased bilirubin (3.1%).

IMPORTANT PATIENT INFORMATION
This is only a summary. See complete Prescribing Information at Mytesi.com or by calling 1-844-722-8256. This does not take the place of talking with your doctor about your medical condition or treatment.

What Is Mytesi?
Mytesi is a prescription medicine used to improve symptoms of noninfectious diarrhea (diarrhea not caused by a bacterial, viral, or parasitic infection) in adults living with HIV/AIDS on ART.

Do Not Take Mytesi if you have diarrhea caused by an infection. Before you start Mytesi, your doctor and you should make sure your diarrhea is not caused by an infection (such as bacteria, virus, or parasite).

Possible Side Effects of Mytesi Include:
- Upper respiratory tract infection (sinus, nose, and throat infection)
- Bronchitis (swelling of the tubes that carry air to and from your lungs)
- Cough
- Flatulence (gas)
- Increased bilirubin (a waste product when red blood cells break down)

For a full list of side effects, please talk to your doctor. Tell your doctor if you have any side effect that bothers you or does not go away.

You are encouraged to report negative side effects of prescription drugs to the FDA. Visit www.fda.gov/medwatch or call 1-800-FDA-1088.

Should I Take Mytesi If I Am:
- Pregnant or Planning to Become Pregnant?
  - Studies in animals show that Mytesi could harm an unborn baby or affect the ability to become pregnant.
  - There are no studies in pregnant women taking Mytesi.
  - This drug should only be used during pregnancy if clearly needed.

A Nursing Mother?
- It is not known whether Mytesi is passed through human breast milk.
- If you are nursing, you should tell your doctor before starting Mytesi.
- Your doctor will help you to decide whether to stop nursing or to stop taking Mytesi.

Under 18 or Over 65 Years of Age?
- Mytesi has not been studied in children under 18 years of age.
- Mytesi studies did not include many people over the age of 65. So it is not clear if this age group will respond differently. Talk to your doctor to find out if Mytesi is right for you.

What Should I Know About Taking Mytesi With Other Medicines?
If you are taking any prescription or over-the-counter medicine, herbal supplements, or vitamins, tell your doctor before starting Mytesi.

What If I Have More Questions About Mytesi?
For more information, please see the full Prescribing Information at Mytesi.com or speak to your doctor or pharmacist.

To report side effects or make a product complaint or for additional information, call 1-844-722-8256.
