Kalamazoo County Has a Brand New ID Program... and Norah Getz Wants to Tell You All About It

COVER STORY
BY ELLEN SHANNA KNOPPOW

On May 2 Kalamazoo County rolled out its new ID program after more than year of hard work and packed community meetings. Designed for people who are able to prove their identity but lack the documents to obtain a driver’s license or state ID, the Kalamazoo County ID’s stated purpose is, “To recognize all Kalamazoo County residents and enable them to connect with public safety, civic and community services.”

Uses include identification for opening a bank account and cashing checks at participating institutions, picking up prescriptions and proving identity to law enforcement. Specific populations that stand to benefit from the new ID include homeless people; transgender residents of the county; seniors and other individuals who do not have a birth certificate; people who have recently been released from prison and others who are under documented. It cannot be used to gain citizenship, for voter identification or for obtaining a driver’s license. Nor can it be used to purchase alcohol, tobacco or firearms.

To secure the new ID, applicants must produce documents totaling a certain number of points following the ID program’s point system. Qualifying documents include high school diplomas, Michigan Department of Corrections prison ID card, pay stubs and many others. The ID costs $10 and scholarships are available.

Initially, many commissioners were skeptical of the proposed ID program, but thanks to a grassroots effort and a task force of 40 people from a broad range of organizations, they were able to pass a resolution for the ID by a 6-5 vote along party lines.

Recent Kalamazoo College graduate Norah Getz was part of that effort. Getz, who is in the process of transitioning to her authentic female self, spoke to the importance of having affirming identification.

“It means me and people like me can get an ID with their name on it without having to go through... so many hours and so much money to be able to get an ID through the [state or federal] government with their name on it, in a very easy and affordable way,” she said. “It’s very fulfilling for me... I’m very grateful for the people who helped make it possible... it means a lot, it really does.”

Being able to use one’s preferred name on the front of the ID (with one’s legal name on the back), and choosing the gender to be displayed rather than being required to use one’s assigned sex at birth, or even the outright removal of gender as an identifying category is a tremendous benefit to the local transgender community. Getz gave an example of one of the ID’s practical uses

“If you get pulled over you have some ID to show if you normally wouldn’t have a driver’s license, or would rather not out yourself by showing people an ID with your dead name on it,” Getz said. “It’s very important that we have this resource so easily accessible, because getting a legal federal name and gender marker change is really hard. I’m just starting with the process and there’s a whole lot of bureaucracy.”

At the time of her interview with BTL, Getz was attending a re-election fundraiser for Kalamazoo County Commissioner Tracy Hall. As co-chair of the county ID task force, Hall was instrumental in its passage (see page 11.)

In addition to addressing an unmet need for certain residents of the county, the initiative has also served as a community-building effort. The county website summed up the issue well, “Without a form of identification, a person is not recognized as a member of the community and not afforded the same opportunities as other community members. Having a form of credible identification enables people to become fully participating members of the community.”

Getz pointed out the number of businesses that are on board with the new ID, giving a shout out to Los Amigos for their discount to people showing their ID at the local Mexican restaurant chain.

“In a way, you’re probably saving money by buying this thing,” she said, encouraging people who might not otherwise need to have a county ID to get one.

Getz went on to stress that this is for the “general community.”

“Even beyond just the queer community. This is really important to highlight that this is an ID for everyone to get,” she said. “The more people use it, the more normalized the ID becomes and it’s less likely for the ID to become known as ‘the trans card’ or ‘the homeless card’ or ‘the under-documented card.’”

But Getz is not satisfied with the county ID program ending with Kalamazoo County, and was surprised to learn that Washtenaw and the city of Detroit in Wayne County are the only other places in Michigan that has such an ID. The activist thought out loud about other places in Michigan where this is needed and plans to contact friends to spread the word.

“I think it’s really politically possible, and also kind of necessary to get this in places like Kent and Wayne County but we’ll see what happens,” she said. “We’ll start making some more noise.”

What it means to me personally, is it means me and people like me can get an ID with their name on it without having to go through... so many hours and so much money.

Between the Lines
U.S. Associate Justice Anthony Kennedy is stepping down from the U.S. Supreme Court after writing four milestone cases in favor of gay rights over the course of his 30 years on the bench.

Here are their responses:

Romer v. Evans – Colorado’s Amendment 2 is unconstitutional because bare animus cannot justify anti-gay measures

Kennedy: “Even if, as the State contends, homosexuals can find protection in laws and policies of general application, Amendment 2 goes well beyond merely depriving them of special rights. It imposes a broad disability upon those persons alone, forbidding them, but no others, to seek specific legal protection from injuries caused by discrimination in a wide range of public and private transactions.”

Attorney: Jean Dubofsky, first female justice in 1979 appointed to the Colorado Supreme Court and the youngest person ever appointed to the court at 37. She later returned to private practice and led the legal team against Amendment 2.

What was the significance of Kennedy’s opinion in Romer to the advancement of LGBT rights?

Dubofsky: When Justice Kennedy asked the first question in the Romer v. Evans argument: Has there ever been a law (he was referring to Amendment 2 to the Colorado Constitution, which prohibited any remedies for discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation) as bad as this? I knew that we had a chance of winning. Until then there was no precedent that supported gay rights. It’s not surprising, given no precedent, that Justice Kennedy’s opinion did not follow customary equal protection analysis. Romer became the starting point for the gay rights cases that followed.

Lawrence v. Texas – state laws criminalizing intimate relations for same-sex couples are unconstitutional

Kennedy: “Liberty protects the person from unwarranted government intrusions into a dwelling or other private places. In our tradition the State is not omnipresent in the home. And there are other spheres of our lives and existence, outside the home, where the State should not be a dominant presence. Freedom extends beyond spatial bounds. Liberty presumes an autonomy of self that includes freedom of thought, belief, expression and certain intimate conduct. The instant case involves liberty of the person both in its spatial and more transcendent dimensions.”

Attorney: Paul Smith, who argued the case for Lambda Legal on behalf of John Geddes Lawrence Jr. and Tyron Garner, now a faculty member at Georgetown University Law Center.

What was the significance of Kennedy’s opinion in Lawrence to the advancement of LGBT rights?

Smith: Lawrence was central to the achievement of further advances for LGBT rights. First, it eliminated the sodomy laws, which were excellent instruments of oppression because they made it difficult for people to live as gay men or lesbians out in the open in some states.

Second, it eliminated the odious decision in Bowers v. Hardwick, which upheld sodomy laws in 1986 and which undercut almost any constitutional argument that could be made in favor of LGBT civil rights under the Constitution.

Finally, the way Justice Kennedy wrote the Lawrence opinion made it a springboard toward legal recognition of same-sex relationships. He made clear that our relationships have the same value and play the same role as different-sex relationships. He also established firmly that the government has no right to make moral judgments condemning individual choices about what kind of relationship or family to form. In our free society, those are choices individuals get to make.

As Justice Scalia noted in his dissent in Lawrence, those two moves made it difficult to oppose claims to marriage equality. Our opponents struggled for the next 12 years to explain why same-sex couples could be excluded from marriage, once they could no longer offer up the kind of moral arguments that Lawrence forbade.

Now that Kennedy has announced his retirement, to what extent is his legacy on LGBT rights in danger?

Smith: I would anticipate that the new Court will be supportive of claims like that made in Masterpiece Cakeshop for individual private exemptions from state or federal laws banning anti-gay discrimination.

I would be surprised, however, if the Court were to overrule Obergefell and authorize states to refuse to marry same-sex couples. Marriage equality is too ingrained in our national understanding of fairness and justice. But we should be watchful nonetheless.
United States v. Windsor, Section 3 of the Defense of Marriage Act, which barred federal recognition of same-sex marriage, is unconstitutional

Kennedy: “DOMA instructs all federal officials, and indeed all persons with whom same-sex couples interact, including their own children, that their marriage is less worthy than the marriages of others. The federal statute is invalid, for no legitimate purpose overcomes the purpose and effect to disparage and to injure those whom the State, by its marriage laws, sought to protect in personhood and dignity.”

Attorney: Roberta Kaplan, who argued the case on behalf of New York widow Edith Windsor, now founding partner at Kaplan & Company LLP.

Editor’s Note: The Blade submitted questions to Kaplan on the significance of the Windsor decision in the aftermath of Kennedy’s retirement, but she declined to provide responses before deadline.

Obergefell v. Hodges, state laws barring same-sex couples from obtaining marriage licenses and prohibiting recognition of those marriages are unconstitutional

Kennedy: “No union is more profound than marriage, for it embodies the highest ideals of love, fidelity, devotion, sacrifice and family. In forming a marital union, two people become something greater than once they were. As some of the petitioners in these cases demonstrate, marriage embodies a love that may endure even past death. It would misunderstand these men and women to say they disrespect the idea of marriage. Their plea is that they do respect it, respect it so deeply that they seek to find its fulfillment for themselves. ”

Attorney: Mary Bonauto, civil rights project director at GLBTQ Advocates & Defenders who argued the case on behalf of Ohio widower Jim Obergfell and other plaintiffs

What was the significance of Kennedy’s opinion in Obergefell to the advancement of LGBT rights?

Bonauto: Obergefell is significant on many levels. In practical terms, it says the constitutional right to marry includes LGBT people’s aspirations to marry the person of their choice. There are no “skim milk” marriages: The same “constellation of benefits” and responsibilities government allocates to others must be available to married same-sex couples.

Ideas of liberty and “central precepts of equality” both animate the ruling. The Court’s reasoning extended beyond the concrete protections of marriage to talk about the “grave and continuing harm” and “disrespect and subordination” imposed on LGBT people vis-à-vis others by our exclusion from marriage. That powerful insight is both a sword and shield to attack laws and proposals to degrade us, our families and marriages.

With “equal dignity in the eyes of the law,” Justice Kennedy’s rulings have helped make meaningful changes in LGBT people’s lives, enabling us to live more openly and moving us closer to equal citizenship.

Now that Kennedy has announced his retirement, to what extent is his legacy on LGBT rights in danger?

Bonauto: Justice Kennedy’s legacy will be a lasting one in part because he modelled what Justice Ginsburg described in 1996 – the story of our Constitution is one of including those who had formerly been excluded.

Every generation may search for meaning and refuge in the enduring promises of liberty, equality and due process, and so he listened to LGBT people who had been “outlaw[s]” and “outcast[s].” In Romer, then more boldly in Lawrence, Windsor and Obergefell, Justice Kennedy saw LGBT people as part of the “us” in our nation. The common humanity of LGBT people is irreversible.

Justice Kennedy rejected government attempts to impose double standards on LGBT people when discrimination was framed up as objections to gay people’s conduct, rather than gay people’s status, by correctly seeing them as the same.

I believe the four rulings are solid, and Obergefell even explained why marriage is a fundamental right and established access to and treatment of marriages as an equality issue.

But this part of his legacy will be tested repeatedly, as we already face attempted service refusals by businesses and new limits on LGBT peoples’ ability to adopt and foster children. Even as powerful people take aim at marriage in both the short and long term, one of our community’s legacies throughout the time of Justice Kennedy’s career is a commitment to engagement on LGBT and other civic issues, and to the political process at every level.

What is BIKTARVY®?

BIKTARVY is a complete, 1-pill, once-a-day prescription medicine used to treat HIV-1 in adults. It can either be used in people who have never taken HIV-1 medicines before, or people who are replacing their current HIV-1 medicines and whose healthcare provider determines they meet certain requirements.

BIKTARVY does not cure HIV-1 or AIDS. HIV-1 is the virus that causes AIDS.

IMPORTANT SAFETY INFORMATION

What is the most important information I should know about BIKTARVY?

BIKTARVY may cause serious side effects:

- Worsening of hepatitis B (HBV) infection. If you have both HIV-1 and HBV and stop taking BIKTARVY, your HBV may suddenly get worse. Do not stop taking BIKTARVY without first talking to your healthcare provider, as they will need to monitor your health.

Who should not take BIKTARVY?

Do not take BIKTARVY if you take:

- dofetilide
- rifampin
- any other medicines to treat HIV-1

What are the other possible side effects of BIKTARVY?

Serious side effects of BIKTARVY may also include:

- Changes in your immune system. Your immune system may get stronger and begin to fight infections. Tell your healthcare provider if you have any new symptoms after you start taking BIKTARVY.

- Kidney problems, including kidney failure. Your healthcare provider should do blood and urine tests to check your kidneys. If you develop new or worse kidney problems, they may tell you to stop taking BIKTARVY.

- Too much lactic acid in your blood (lactic acidosis), which is a serious but rare medical emergency that can lead to death.

Tell your healthcare provider right away if you get these symptoms: weakness or being more tired than usual, unusual muscle pain, being short of breath or fast breathing, stomach pain with nausea and vomiting, cold or blue hands and feet, feel dizzy or lightheaded, or a fast or abnormal heartbeat.

- Severe liver problems, which in rare cases can lead to death. Tell your healthcare provider right away if you get these symptoms: skin or the white part of your eyes turns yellow, dark “tea-colored” urine, light-colored stools, loss of appetite for several days or longer, nausea, or stomach-area pain.

The most common side effects of BIKTARVY in clinical studies were diarrhea (6%), nausea (5%), and headache (5%). Tell your healthcare provider if you have any side effects that bother you or don’t go away.

What should I tell my healthcare provider before taking BIKTARVY?

- All your health problems. Be sure to tell your healthcare provider if you have or have had any kidney or liver problems, including hepatitis virus infection.

- All the medicines you take, including prescription and over-the-counter medicines, antacids, laxatives, vitamins, and herbal supplements. BIKTARVY and other medicines may affect each other. Keep a list of all your medicines and show it to your healthcare provider and pharmacist, and ask if it is safe to take BIKTARVY with all of your other medicines.

- If you are pregnant or plan to become pregnant. It is not known if BIKTARVY can harm your unborn baby. Tell your healthcare provider if you become pregnant while taking BIKTARVY.

- If you are breastfeeding (nursing) or plan to breastfeed. Do not breastfeed. HIV-1 can be passed to the baby in breast milk.

You are encouraged to report negative side effects of prescription drugs to the FDA. Visit www.fda.gov/medwatch, or call 1-800-FDA-1088.

Ask your healthcare provider if BIKTARVY is right for you.
BIKTARVY is a 1-pill, once-a-day complete HIV-1 treatment for adults who are either new to treatment or whose healthcare provider determines they can replace their current HIV-1 medicines with BIKTARVY.

BIKTARVY does not cure HIV-1 or AIDS.

Because HIV doesn’t change who you are.
IMPORTANT FACTS
This is only a brief summary of important information about BIKTARVY® and does not replace talking to your healthcare provider about your condition and your treatment.

MOST IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT BIKTARVY
BIKTARVY may cause serious side effects, including:
• Worsening of hepatitis B (HBV) infection. If you have both HIV-1 and HBV, your HBV may suddenly get worse if you stop taking BIKTARVY. Do not stop taking BIKTARVY without first talking to your healthcare provider, as they will need to check your health regularly for several months.

ABOUT BIKTARVY
BIKTARVY is a complete, 1-pill, once-a-day prescription medicine used to treat HIV-1 in adults. Tracy Hall: ‘I Am Who I Am’

T

 Tracy Hall had always loved politics, but never anticipated a career as an elected official.

“I was one of those weird – and I mean this in a really nice way – children. I loved things about politics and law, and I got that from my grandparents,” said the Democrat running for a second term on the board of the Kalamazoo County Commission.

Through her school years, Hall worked on campaigns but always saw herself as only being involved behind the scenes. Back then, she experienced self-doubt – due in part to the anxiety she has since overcome – but was inspired by three Michigan women to take the next step.

“It was women like Gretchen Whitmer, [who] was fighting for Elliott-Larsen. She was speaking out for the community before in some ways it was kind of cool to, before a lot of politicians evolved on the issues. Around the same time ... you have Lisa Brown and Barb Byrum, who were silenced for using the words “vasectomy” and “vagina” in the state legislature. And I remember thinking, ‘if there are these three women that are fighting for things I care about, that are near and dear to my heart, I can do something locally.’” It was with those women in mind, and her mother as well, that Hall ran for the Kalamazoo City Commission in 2013. Of 15 candidates, seven would be elected. Hall came in eighth, losing by a very slim margin.

She planned to run again in 2015, but chose not to after her mother died unexpectedly.

“My mom is still so much part of my story,” she said. “Being raised by a single mom, in poverty, her working; I wouldn’t be here today without who she was ... I couldn’t share that story and not get emotional about it.”

Also around that time, Hall was recruited by her county commissioner when he chose to run for county clerk, because, as he told her, “he would love to see a progressive woman in that seat.”

That’s when Hall decided to go ahead, winning all seven precincts with 70 percent of the vote.

“And I love it,” she said. “I absolutely live being a county commissioner.”

In her first term, Hall helped get a senior millage on the ballot which will be voted on this August. She has also coordinated efforts with animal services to reduce the kill rate in the county. But the accomplishment she is most proud of is Kalamazoo County’s ID program, brand-new as of this May.

As Hall tells it, it was only her first or second meeting when they asked for people to serve on the task force.

“And I don’t remember why it happened, it just happened and I raised my hand and I thought, ‘This could help a lot of people,’ but I didn’t really know much about it ... and I homelesness.

“We have a huge homelessness problem, that I think that as a county government, we can act as the convener,” she said. “We have wonderful resources in Kalamazoo – in the city and in the county – that I think in some ways are siloed.”

She said she envisions bringing people to the table to work together on the cause. Another critical issue, the senior millage mentioned earlier, is personal for Hall.

“My grandma, before she passed away – we didn’t know this – would often have to choose between her prescription drugs and eating,” Hall said. “No grandma or grandpa should have to live like that.”

When asked if she has experienced any homophobia in her career, she was frank.

“A little bit,” Hall said. “That’s definitely a real experience, but it’s definitely more subtle than overt.”

Though overall she said that even the more conservative members of the commission have treated her with nothing but respect, and that she was able to pass a Pride Month resolution for the county last year. Still, it wasn’t all smooth sailing.

“I heard rumblings about me having a ‘gay agenda’ – which I think is kind of funny, ‘cause I didn’t think that was still a thing! And, certainly, one of the things I was advised early on in 2013, (was to) maybe not to be so ‘out.’ And I’m like, ‘No, that’s not who I am,’” she said. “I’m a walking, talking stereotype in many ways: I teach the stuff, I have worked for, pay for and volunteer for on behalf of my community.”

In addition to her political involvement, Hall is also an instructor in the Department of Gender and Women’s Studies at Western Michigan University and teaches political science and sociology at Kalamazoo Valley Community College. She also serves on the boards of OutFront and CARES (Community AIDS Resource and Education Services). When asked why she is so active in the community, she said she would like to be a role model for LGBTQ youth – especially women.

“I’m proud to represent our community in some facet. We are so underrepresented in electoral politics and in many other areas of life. And if I can help some younger woman or girl that ... might have an interest in politics but because of societal messages may not [pursue that interest], but she sees me – there’s a lot of value in that,” Hall said. “I try to be that role model, without sort of that arrogance that’s ... with that. I just want to do good for the community.”

When Women Run, Women Win

- Theme of Tracy Hall’s re-election kickoff event
In Cass Park with Bobby Burns

Detroit’s imposing, massive, block-wide Masonic Temple was built in 1922 – cornerstone-dated 5022 – following the Hebraic custom of noting esoteric history.

At one time in the 1960s every major dance company in the world, classical musician, orchestra and performer appeared there; many brought to the city by famed impresario Sol Hurok.

I heard Paul Paray many times conduct the DSO, thrilled to include soprano Maria Callas in red-carpet recital – her conductor arrested at the long-closed, seedy Stone Movie Theatre – I saw Russian defector Rudolph Nureyev and Dame Margot Fonteyn dance a memorable “Swan Lake” (curiously, too, a few years ago I attended a freak gathering in a small masonic auditorium, where leathermen and women, BDSM devotees, straight and gay kink comrades gathered for an evening of mutual exposure, mental angst and playpen seduction. A BTL former editor was a self-styled dom. I, her 95 percent vanilla guest.)

I suppose I was about 16 one mid-June, no-school day as I sat alone relaxing, soon to be joined by an older, athletic-looking guy who was probably about 30. He asked if he might join me and I said, “Yes,” pleased for the company.

Across from the Masonic Temple is Cass Park, named for former Michigan governor Lewis Cass. As a kid I spent my summers playing there, wading its centrally-located fountain, and, as a nascent gay, enjoying looking at my collection of Strength and Health magazines, admiring muscle idols Clarence Ross and Steve Reeves.

At the edge of the park is a statue of Scottish poet Robert Burns. When the statue was dedicated in 1923, thousands gathered for a mass picture taken that honored the unveiling (how many today know or care who Robert Burns was?).

I played tag around the statue. On three sides are poetry quotes I learned by heart: Nae man can tether time nor tide / From scenes like these old Scotia’s grandeur springs / Wee modest crimson flower, thou has met me in an evil hour.

For fun, my friend Joan McGonical and I would pretend we were European survivors of World War II. We’d fake German accents, and talk in earshot of park benchers about bombings, blackouts and the horrors we had endured. Occasionally, listeners who felt sorry for us – or liked our performances – gave us nickels and dimes.

I suppose I was about 16 one mid-June, no-school day as I sat alone relaxing, soon to be joined by an older, athletic-looking guy who was probably about 30. He asked if he might join me and I said, “Yes,” pleased for the company.

His name was Marcus and he said he was home on leave from the navy. He was visiting a friend who lived nearby.

“Would you like a Coke?” he offered, pointing to a nearby drug store.

I think about the power of our vote a lot. Maybe it’s from hearing my grandmother talk about all they had to endure to have the right to vote. Maybe it’s from being with my godmother, walking up and down the streets of her neighborhood, passing out flyers to inform and get her neighbors to the polls. And I know a big part of it is from listening to my mother and going with her to the polls to vote at each and every election.

I think about the power of our vote because, before School House Rock, I knew there were three branches of government and often the courts were our last defense in protecting our rights, interpreting the sometimes-archaic language of the constitution to reflect our changing society. I learned it in school.

When the election outcome wasn’t quite as we expected, I learned from these three amazing women about all they had to endure to have the right to vote. And I know a big part of it is from listening to my mother and going with her to the polls to vote at each and every election.

Our Voice, Our Vote! Now More Important Than Ever!

BY MICHELLE E. BROWN
Viewpoint

who feel free to say whatever they want and go home to watch this train wreck unfold in front of us on the daily news.

The questions I have heard or been asked most frequently are, “How do we talk to each other when so much hatred has been spewed, so many lies told? And What are we going to do?”

We can’t all pack and move to Canada or stay in our beds with our heads covered hoping it was all just a bad dream while sending up hopes and prayers that sanity will somehow prevail.

Now more than ever it’s time to be visible, to be vocal and to create change.

How do we do this? By being visible every day and everywhere. At our jobs, where we shop, at community meetings, where we worship, at our schools and universities and in our neighborhoods even over the fence in our backyards.

It is not the time for us to be silent, to be fearful, to go back in the closet or to give up on building bridges and alliances. Our vote counts. Every vote counts.

We have to bring every vote - LGBTQ and all our allies - to the polls beginning now and send these chickens home to roost.

We exist! We persist! And when our equality and the safety of our families or community is threatened, we will resist.

Let’s amplify our voices by marching in solidarity with women because when they say #MeToo it means #UsToo because we are also victims of abuse, harassment and are survivors.

Let’s amplify our voices by marching in solidarity with immigrants because LGBTQ immigrants seek refuge, asylum from persecution even death and seek the promise of freedom this country was founded on.

Let’s amplify our voices by standing in solidarity with #BlackLivesMatter and #TransLivesMatter activists because all of our lives matter. There is no them and us. There must be one beloved community where every voice regardless of race, ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation or gender expression is lifted up, valued and included.

Let’s create change in our municipalities, in our counties, in our state and in our country by showing up not just at the big elections but at every election to elect fair minded officials to restore a government by, for, and of the people from the schoolhouse to the White House.

Malcolm X once spoke of “chickens coming home to roost.” His remarks referred to an old proverb, actually a curse, going back over half a millennium meaning basically that one’s previous actions will eventually have consequences.

Well we’ve had a group of chickens laying eggs of bigotry, bias, intolerance and inequality for some time now. Now they are emboldened by the rhetoric of a big orange rooster.

It is not the time for us to be silent, to be fearful, to go back in the closet or to give up on building bridges and alliances. Our vote counts. Every vote counts. We have to bring every vote - LGBTQ and all our allies - to the polls beginning now and send these chickens home to roost.

“Sure, why not?” I agreed, somewhat eagerly. After our coke and conversation, he asked if I’d like a ride to Palmer Park.

“I’d like to, but I have to be home for dinner soon,” I hesitated. “Can we meet tomorrow?” I offered, hopefully.

“Sure. Let’s meet at noon,” Marcus smiled, patting me on the shoulder. “Anchors away!”

The next day, I put on a clean shirt and Brylecreemed my hair - “A little dab’ll do ya,” ran the radio commercial - and arrived at 11:15. I sat there for an hour. Waiting, waiting. Marcus never showed. Soon, it began to rain. It was a disappointment. The first of many in my young, just-coming-out, gay life.”

Creep of the Week

Trump Voters

The other day I heard a self-proclaimed democrat who voted for Trump say he didn’t like Hillary.

“Bernie would have won. We told them we wanted Bernie,” he said, referring to Sanders winning the primary election in Michigan. “But they didn’t listen to us.”

He didn’t exactly admit that voting for Trump was a mistake, but he did acknowledge that Trump was not a good president. He was also (spoiler alert!) a straight white guy.

While listening to this man talk I thought I was going to grind my teeth into powder.

This was just a few hours before Trump was to announce his U.S. Supreme Court pick. Something I felt literally sick over.

You see, the Supreme Court is pretty important to me. In June, 2015, I was sitting in a chemo ward getting poisoned pumped into my body as part of my treatment for breast cancer. I was more miserable than I’d ever been, and not just because I was bald, bloated and nauseous.

The clock was ticking. Not on my life so much, as treatment — though hellacious — was going well and I had a good prognosis. But my insurance was running out. Aug. 31 would be my last day with insurance and I was only half way done with treatment. I was terrified that saving my life would bankrupt my family.

Before the Supreme Court in June 2015 were two cases over issues that would decide my fate: marriage equality and the Affordable Care Act.

See, I was legally married to my wife. We had a legal document from California as proof. But that wasn’t recognized in Michigan. And so my wife’s health insurance, far better than mine, was out of reach. So I’d planned to buy insurance through the Affordable Care Act.

Yet the court’s ruling could’ve effectively dismantled the ACA. And the court’s ruling on marriage equality could’ve effectively rendered me permanently without a legal spouse.

So when the Supreme Court ruled that the ACA was safe (for that time being), I was relieved. And when they ruled that yes, my marriage was real and Michigan damn well better recognize it, I was, well, I was very sick, so it was hard to feel especially celebratory, but I did feel like a huge weight had been lifted off of me and my family.

The next day my wife called her HR person to add me to her insurance. I was expecting a fight. They just said, “Okay, can you spell her name?” We then went to our lawyer to have papers drawn up to make me, finally, the legal parent to my son. It was literally life-changing.

So to all of the people who voted for Trump because they “just didn’t like Clinton,” I cannot forgive you. You put America’s most vulnerable populations in peril because you didn’t like a lady’s laugh.

You didn’t <ital have> to vote <ital for> Clinton. You could’ve voted for the Supreme Court. You could’ve voted <ital against> the candidate endorsed by Nazis. You could have voted <ital against> the candidate that bragged about sexually assaulting women. You could have even voted for no one!

The problem is, of course, that Mr. “Bernie would’ve won” didn’t have a lot at stake when casting his vote. Being white, male and heterosexual is pretty much a superpower in America. Very little hurts you. This superpower is even stronger in men with money.

Under Trump, every day’s a new nightmare for minorities and women (and, yes, I know that white women also went for Trump; whiteness is a hell of a drug). His administration has attacked (and this is a partial list) transgender people, the sick, immigrants, asylum seekers, black people, Mexicans, women, the disabled, the press, lesbians and gays and anyone who doesn’t look like Stephen Miller.

If you voted for this and you’re happy about what’s happening, well, congratulations. Enjoy it, I guess. I hope it filled the void in you where empathy is supposed to be.

And if you voted for this and you’re not happy about it? You have a lot of work to do! But it will first take the ability to look at yourself in the mirror and say, “I did a selfish and shortsighted thing and I am personally responsible for hurting lots of people.” Which isn’t an easy task. It’ll suck, but not as badly as having your civil rights stripped from you sucks.

As they say, actions speak louder than words. Volunteer for a democrat’s campaign (because under Trump Republicans have proven to all be trash). Donate money to progressive causes that help people being hurt by Trump’s policies.

Don’t you dare ask me or anyone else who wakes up every day terrified by the erosion of our rights and our democracy for forgiveness. The road to redemption is long. And no, we will not give you a ride. You walk and think about what you did.
British Government to Ban Conversion Therapy

BY MICHAEL K. LAVERS

The British government on Tuesday announced it will ban so-called conversion therapy in the U.K. The ban is among the 75 recommendations to promote equality and fight discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity that the government made in response to a nationwide survey of more than 108,000 LGBTI people it launched in July 2017.

Women and Equalities Minister Penny Mordaunt in the survey’s executive summary notes two percent of respondents said they had “undergone conversion or reparative therapy in an attempt to ‘cure’ them of being LGBT” and another five percent said they “had been offered it.”

“We will bring forward proposals to end the practice of conversion therapy in the U.K.,” said the government in its “LGBT Action Plan: Improving the Lives of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexuals and Transgender People” document that it submitted to Parliament. “These activities are wrong, and we are not willing to let them continue.”

The Government Equalities Office will lead efforts to ban the highly discredited practice. “We will fully consider all legislative and non-legislative options to prohibit promoting, offering or conducting conversion therapy,” said the government. “Our intent is to protect people who are vulnerable to harm or violence, whether that occurs in a medical, commercial or faith-based context.”

The government added it is “not trying to prevent LGBT people from seeking legitimate medical support or spiritual support from their faith leader in the exploration of their sexual orientation or gender identity.”

Ruth Hunt, chief executive of Stonewall, a British LGBTI advocacy group, in a statement said it is “absolutely vital that more is done to stamp out this demeaning and unethical act.” Hunt also welcomed the government’s recommendations as “an important first step.”

“But we must see action that leads to tangible change,” added Hunt.

The government released the results of the survey and its recommendations less than three months after Prime Minister Theresa May said she “deeply” regrets colonial-era laws criminalizing consensual same-sex sexual relations the U.K. introduced in Commonwealth countries. British Ambassador to the U.S. Kim Darroch last month urged these nations that have yet to repeal these laws to do so.

“We just urge all of our friends and partners in other countries around the world to move on as we have done to make their societies more open, more liberal, to embrace anti-discrimination in relation to the LGBT community as we have,” Darroch told the Washington Blade during an interview at the British Embassy in D.C. before its annual Pride month reception. “It just makes your society a better place.”

Mexico’s President-Elect Cites LGBT Community in Victory Speech

BY GRACE PERRY

Andrés Manuel López Obrador on Sunday became Mexico’s first leftist president in decades, winning in a landslide victory with more than 50 percent of the vote.

López Obrador — commonly known by his initials AMLO — has a long history in politics. He was Mexico City’s mayor from 2000 to 2005, and he ran (and lost) in the two previous presidential elections. A member of the Democratic Revolution Party (PRD), López Obrador ran on an anti-corruption platform and a narrative of social change centered around eradicating poverty. His win represents a clear rejection of the status quo and political establishment and a desire for widespread change.

Gaby Soberanis, president of Diversidad Guerrero in Acapulco, said she hopes the changes brought about by his election and presidency are “for good,” and that he’s able to combat the country’s systemic “violence” and “insecurity” through “alliances, programs and public policies in favor of the collective.”

Current President Enrique Peña Nieto is one of the country’s most unpopular leaders in decades, with an administration characterized by scandal and inadequacy in combating crime and violence. According to the Mexican Interior Ministry, nearly 30,000 people were killed last year in the country, making it the worst year on record for homicides.

Peña Nieto was a member of the centrist Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI), which has ruled Mexico for most of the last century. José Antonio Meade, the PRI candidate in this year’s election, finished in third place behind López Obrador and Ricardo Anaya, a center-right politician.

López Obrador has already begun breaking from previous presidents; in his Sunday victory speech, he said, “the state will represent all Mexicans...from all points of view and sexual preferences.”

According to Karolyna Pollorena, an LGBTI activist in Mexicali, López Obrador is the first president-elect in the country’s history to specifically mention the LGBTI community in his victory speech. She also said López Obrador will have a more diverse cabinet than previous administrations and more progressive representatives across various government sectors.

“With it [the administration] and the help of the Mexican LGBTITI+ Coalition, we hope that this new government can help legalize marriage equality in the states where it’s lacking in Mexico and also move forward on issues of legislation that have (stalled) in past governments,” Pollorena said.

Despite his remarks in his victory speech, López Obrador did not campaign explicitly as an advocate for LGBTI rights or marriage equality, and he dodged questions on the campaign trail regarding such issues. His electoral coalition also includes the Social Encounter Party (PES), which was founded by evangelical Christians and has opposed previous efforts to federally legalize same-sex marriage.

Given these factors, Alex Ali Méndez Díaz — a lawyer spearheading same-sex marriage efforts in Mexico — said LGBTI advocacy will remain principally centered in civil society.

“It is up to civil society to continue working to make our voices heard and to defend ourselves against any attempt at invisibilization and/or regression,” Méndez Díaz said.

Pollorena echoed Méndez Díaz’s belief that Mexican citizens are the key to progress and should be engaged and active under the new administration, saying “it is now important to invite citizens to get involved and demand that campaign promises be fulfilled when the new administration begins.”

Trump Keeps Omitting LGBT People from HIV/AIDS Statement

BY CHRIS JOHNSON

For the second year in a row, President Trump has issued a statement recognizing National HIV Testing that omits any mention of the vulnerability of LGBT people to the disease.

The lack of LGBT inclusion in statements on HIV/AIDS has been a consistent theme from Trump, who last year issued a statement on World AIDS Day that also failed to mention LGBT people being disproportionately impacted by the disease.

To be fair, President Obama never mentioned LGBT people in his statements on National HIV Testing Day either, but did mention LGBT vulnerability to the disease in other statements, including his final proclamation on World AIDS Day.

The White House didn’t respond to a request for comment on LGBT omission from the National HIV Testing Day statement.

Trump in his statement lauded “the great progress we have made” against HIV/AIDS, including national efforts “to spread awareness about the importance of getting tested.”

“Early detection of HIV — using a simple and routine test — is instrumental in helping contain the advancement of the virus to Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome (AIDS),” Trump said.

Trump also promoted HIV testing by pointing out new medications are helping people with HIV/AIDS “live longer and healthier lives.” Alluding to PrEP, Trump noted the Food & Drug Administration approved medication dramatically reducing the risk of HIV infection in the first place.

Although Trump doesn’t mention LGBT people in his statement, Trump does mention the high number of youths who are contracting the disease.

“Despite this progress, in 2016, nearly 40,000 people were diagnosed with HIV in the United States,” Trump said. “People between the ages of 20 and 29 received more than a third of those diagnoses. Even more troubling, 44 percent of people living with HIV between the ages of 13 and 24 were unaware that they were carrying the virus.”

Trump concludes that National HIV Testing Day is “an important reminder” those who are unaware they are carrying the disease are the “most at risk for inadvertently infecting others and missing out on potentially life-saving treatments.”

“As we observe National HIV Testing Day, we celebrate the advancements we have made in medical science, and I encourage all Americans to invest in their health and be aware of their HIV status,” Trump said. “Through greater awareness and education, we can all do our part to lead healthier and longer lives.”

Carl Schmid, deputy executive director of the AIDS Institute, said he was “happy” with the statement despite the LGBT omission.

“It doesn’t mention any of the groups,” Schmid said. “And I was thinking, gee, we did a statement, and I didn’t mention LGBT in ours either. We just focused on the number of people not being tested and the importance of testing.”

“I think we should give him credit for issuing a statement,” Schmid said. “I didn’t know they were going to do it, so I’m pleased. It shows that they are providing attention to HIV.”

Although Trump doesn’t mention LGBT people in his National HIV Strategy, a recently released report from the Department of Health & Human Services’ Office of HIV/AIDS & Infectious Disease Policy, which adopted Obama-era goals in confronting the disease, did include statistics on the vulnerability of gay and bisexual men, as well as transgender women, to the disease.

Schmid acknowledged the lack of LGBT mention on HIV/AIDS — as well as other populations — has been a theme from Trump, and said identification of youth as a vulnerable population is important because most of them are LGBT.

“I hope that he will address LGBT – particularly youth – and black and Latino gay youth as well, but I give him credit for issuing this, and I think we should,” Schmid said.

Study Documents Millennials’ Views on LGBT Issues

MILLIONNES are America’s largest, most diverse generation and an important potential voting bloc. So, now more than ever, it’s important to understand their thoughts on issues that impact all Americans. A new survey created by GenForward called “Millennials Views on LGBT Issues: Race, Identity and Experience” asks questions on these topics and more.

GenForward is a nationally-representative survey of millennials led by Dr. Cathy Cohen from the University of Chicago, with samples of African-American, Latinx and Asian-American Millennials aged 18 to 34. This survey was taken from May 17 to June 3 of this year and it includes interviews with 525 African-Americans, 256 Asian-Americans, 502 Latinx individuals and 553 white millennials. These groups were asked their views on their own sexual identities, their perceptions of discrimination against LGBT people – both within the U.S. and their respective racial and ethnic communities – and their moral evaluations of LGBT relationships. These findings were then analyzed.

Notable Highlights

- LGBTQ millennials prioritize policies to end bullying of youth and to curtail violent hate crimes over policies that deal with family issues and health (HIV/AIDS) concerns, which were formerly front and center.
- The percentage self-identifying as LGBTQ is at 14 percent – several points above the previously assumed 10 percent and way above the estimated 3 percent as a voting bloc.
- Experiences of discrimination abound, with highest rates in communities of color.
- African-American and Latinx millennials see issues LGBT people face in communities of color as quite different than what mainstream LGBT organizations focus on.
- And, while conventional wisdom tells us millennials are open-minded, they express conflicted views over whether societal acceptance of homosexuality is degrading the country’s moral fiber.

Breakdown of Identity and Experience

- Identifying as LGBTQ. Approximately 14 percent of millennials identify as something other than straight/heterosexual. Larger percentages of Latinx millennials (22 percent) identify as LGBTQ compared with African-Americans (14 percent), whites (13 percent) and Asian-Americans (9 percent).
- Group Solidarity. Millennials who identify as LGBT, independent of race and ethnic group, express higher levels of group solidarity, or “linked fate,” with other LGBT people compared to the linked fate millennials who identify as straight/heterosexual feel toward other straight/heterosexual young adults.
- Knowing Someone Who is LGBT. Large majorities of millennials across race/ethnicity know someone who is gay or lesbian. Fewer, though still substantial amounts of people, know someone who is transgender. White millennials are the most likely to know a transgender person (36 percent) compared to other racial/ethnic groups (~22 percent).

Breakdown of Discrimination

- Anti-LGBT Discrimination in the U.S. Large majorities of millennials across race/ethnicity believe there is “a lot” of or “some” discrimination against lesbians, gays and transgender people in the United States.
- Millennials are more likely to say there is “a lot” of discrimination against transgender people compared to lesbians and gays (46 percent vs. 34 percent).
- Anti-LG Discrimination in Racial Communities. Majorities of Latinx (61 percent) and Asian Americans (53 percent) say there is “a lot” of discrimination against lesbians and gays in their racial community, compared to 43 percent of African-Americans and 27 percent of whites.
- Anti-Transgender Discrimination in Racial Communities. Majorities of Asian-Americans (64 percent) and African-Americans (58 percent) and pluralities of Latinx (49 percent) and whites (47 percent) say there is “a lot” of discrimination against transgender people in their racial community.
- Racial Tensions in the LGBT Movement. Majorities of African-American (53 percent) and Latinx (50 percent) millennials believe that the issues confronting LGBT individuals in communities of color are very different than the issues being promoted by mainstream organizations. In contrast, the majority of white (58 percent) and Asian-American (54 percent) millennials believe that all LGBT individuals benefit when mainstream LGBT organizations fight for basic rights.
- LGBT Views of the LGBT Movement. Millennials who identify as LGBT are also more likely (52 percent) to believe that issues confronting people of color who are LGBT are very different from those that are promoted by mainstream LGBT organizations.

Breakdown of Policy Preferences

- Policy Priorities. Across racial and ethnic groups, millennials say the two most important issues facing the LGBT community are reducing hate crime violence against LGBT people and ending bullying against LGBT youth.
- LGBT millennials, while clearly concerned with bullying, are concerned with equal employment rights to almost the same degree.
- Adoption. Majorities across racial and ethnic groups support adoption by LGBT parents, though African-American (+4 percent), Latinx (+9 percent) and white millennials (+13 percent) are more likely to support adoption by lesbians and gays than by transgender parents.

Least Supported LGBT Policies
- While all the policy proposals had substantial majority support, accepting LGBT immigrants is the least supported policy among white, Latinx and Asian-American millennials.
- Among African-Americans, the least supported policies are those that allow LGBT people to adopt children.

Breakdown of Norms, Acceptance and Morality

- Need to do More to Accept Transgender People. Majorities of Asian-American (69 percent) and white (52 percent) millennials and pluralities of African-American (49 percent) and Latinx (47 percent) millennials say our society has not gone far enough in accepting people who are transgender.
- Accepting LGBT Children. Majorities of millennials say they could accept their son or daughter being LGBT. White millennials (80 percent) expressed the greatest acceptance toward having a child that identified as LGBT, followed by Asian-Americans (76 percent), Latinx (75 percent) and African-American (68 percent) millennials.
- Conflicting Attitudes. Despite their general support of policies promoting the equality of LGBT individuals and communities, a significant percentage of African-American (45 percent), Latinx (42 percent), white (34 percent) and Asian-American (28 percent) millennials also say increasing acceptance of homosexuality is causing a deterioration of morality.
- LGBT millennials. Of millennials who identify as LGBT, over one fifth, or 21 percent, believe that homosexuality is a moral detriment, while among millennials who identify as straight, 40 percent agree that homosexuality is damaging to society’s moral values.

A total of 1,886 interviews were conducted representing the 50 states and the District of Columbia. The survey was offered in English and Spanish and via telephone and web modes. The full report and data can be found at the GenForward website: GenForwardSurvey.com/reports.

Khiana Gaffney was living in Birmingham, Alabama, in 2016 when she made a quick trip home to Detroit to celebrate her grandmother’s 90th birthday. While back in the Motor City, Khiana spent a little time on social media to learn a bit about the local girls. One of those girls, one of those who caught her eye, was the woman who is now her wife, Aleeya Gaffney.

“The day we met earlier that morning we were on Facebook in a group and they were like post your picture and a short bio,” Aleeya recalled. “So she posted her pic. She put her age and where she lived at. I was like, ‘Oh she’s cute but she don’t live here so I’m not going to think nothing of it.’ And she was more of the masculine type and I’d never had an attraction to that type. But she was cute and she caught my eye.”

That night at the bar, a place called Boney’s, the two saw each other across the room.

“That night was karaoke and when I went back on Facebook I was like, ‘That couldn’t be her because she don’t live here.’ I would look every now and then in the mirror and catch her looking at me.”

“She was staring at me in the mirror,” Khiana said.

“I was not,” insisted Aleeya.

“Anyway, I sent my friend over to ask her name and see if she had a girlfriend or just to find out something about her,” Khiana said.

“So she has to come talk to me if she wants to talk to me.”

So the couple started talking, talking and talking some more.

“We got to talking, slow dancing the whole night away,” Aleeya said. “Our conversation was good. She was goofy. She tried to be a little charming. She tried to put on this shy act but she’s really not shy.”

Soon enough, the couple realized they wanted to be together and that somebody was going to have to move.

“I didn’t want her to leave her job to come down South because I felt she had a better job than I did,” Khiana said. “So with me being from Detroit I made a decision to move back home. My mom is deceased and she left me with a house in Detroit so I had somewhere to go. So I moved back home. We dated and I stayed in my house and she stayed in hers.”

And just like that, the couple was engaged.

“We got engaged and we planned, we planned, we planned,” Khiana said. “Every detail from the party bus to the antique Bentley to the ice sculptures. We had our faces carved in fruit.”

The couple had their wedding and reception at Regency Manner in Southfield.

“I’m more of a private type of person,” said Aleeya. “She’s an over the top person. I wanted a private wedding but she wanted a big ceremony. So I said, ‘OK, I’ll give you the big ceremony. But if we’re going to do it we’re going to do it right.’ I wanted to make it epic for her ... I wanted to give her her rainbow fairytale wedding.”

“Everything worked out,” Khiana said. “We had a lot of family and friends there. It was like a fairytale come true.”

Now, Aleeya relishes in the joys of being a married woman.

“I love being married,” said Aleeya. “Everything I say at the end of it I say ‘I’m married now. Do you want to see my ring? I’m married now.’ It feels good to say it. I truly married my best friend.”
Betty Reborn

Jessica Newham, better known as Betty Who, is in a constant state of gay. A Pride festival one day, a stroll through Berlin with four gay friends another. Naturally, their afternoon walk is unfolding when she rings me to talk about—what else?—gay things.

In October, more gay: she’ll perform during the All Things Go 2018 Fall Classic festival in Washington D.C., uniting the 26-year-old Australia-born, Michigan-bred pop fixture with the LGBTQ community’s other best kept secret, Carly Rae Jepsen. “Probably the gayest night of anybody’s life,” Betty says. “There are posters all over D.C. right now that say ‘Make America Slay Again,’ and it has Betty Who and Carly Rae Jepsen and a rainbow flag,” and what’s gayer than that?

OK, possibly the year 2013, when Betty’s breakout bop “Somebody Loves You” soundtracked a viral same-sex proposal video in a Home Depot. Or her on-brand involvement in the second season of Netflix’s “Queer Eye,” singing the series’ theme song, “All Things,” and strutting a catwalk with the Fab Five in the accompanying video.

Just before the release of her new EP on AWAL Recordings, “Betty Pt. 1,” Betty talks about how she wouldn’t have a career without the LGBTQ community and why she left RCA Records (not because of Justin Timberlake, exactly).

What was it like to be in the presence of the Fab Five and Antoni’s crop top for the theme-song video?

Obviously, Antoni is, like, the most handsome and I got to watch him do (the video in) slo-mo with the hair dryer, so I was like, “This is a once in a lifetime opportunity. I am in the presence of this and I know that a million people would literally murder me to be where I am right now. I literally sang for President Obama and that was the coolest thing I’ve ever done, but I still feel more people are jealous of what’s happening to me right now.”

Did you tap into any of the guys’ expertise?

Honestly, I’m so obsessed with Tan (France) and his vibe and his styling choices. I really love what he does for all the boys. But on the shoot he was wearing this white corset that the stylist had actually culled for me and he went into the wardrobe department and he was like, “Wait, I want that.” And he stole my corset. So, it’s obvious to me that we have similar style, if you’re wearing my clothes.

Was becoming the gay queen that you’ve become on your to-do list?

Oh my gosh, absolutely not. I’m so happy... to be! It's such an honor. But no, it was not intentional by any means. I still am so shocked by it all the time. I do kind of feel sheltered and protected by them; I feel quite like they’re an overprotective dad, that’s how the gay community has been with me. And I truly do believe that I would not have a career had it not been for my LGBTQ fans. They’re my people. I feel like my tribe has always been filled with LGBTQ people in my life, separate from my career. So my career, to sort of take shape the way that it has, feels like it’s really kind of aligned with who I am as a person.

It’s just a big extension of your personal life. Totally. Which is what you want it to be when you’re an artist. I meet fans all the time and I’m like, “Oh my god, we could be friends!”

Are you happy where you’re at, success-wise?
I hope that nobody ever is, because I want so much. I’m very forward-thinking, and I think that can be a good thing and a bad thing because you sort of sometimes get swept up in where you want to go and don’t get to really appreciate where you are. In the last six to eight months, my journey has shifted course a little bit and I feel like I’m in a really great place emotionally and mentally around my career for the first time in a long time. Now, I feel really at ease in the place that I am.

What was making you feel uneasy?
Long story short: I think that anybody who is in a not completely healthy working relationship with someone who is supposed to be their partner is challenging. It takes a toll on you. Leaving and becoming the creator of my own destiny and making all of these decisions by myself has put me in a position where I’m so much more tuned into myself. All I’ve ever wanted is to be able to be myself and not have to fight for that, not have to convince anybody that what I’m doing is right, so to have people before the music comes out distilling all of this fear and doubt into you makes it so much more challenging. I want people who are on my team. I want them to be on my side.

And they weren’t?
It was so much about the timeline. When you’re signed to a major label, no matter who you are, it’s, “Well, we can’t put this out that day because Justin Timberlake has an album coming out that day.” I don’t want to have to compete with people who I don’t even know. If your job is to take care of me, you should be taking care of (me). You should be doing what’s right for my project. And waiting two years to put an album out was not right for my project.

What project did we have to wait on?
“The Valley.” I wanted to put “The Valley” out after the first record came out, and my first album came out in October 2014 and “The Valley” came out in the spring of 2017. That was a long time for me. Too long. And it was really difficult for me to sit and wait because you can’t tour, you can’t do anything if you don’t put new music out. I felt quite isolated, and all I wanted to do was share. All I wanted to do was be myself and share myself and make more music and continue to do what I love to do.

What’s the best part of being a free agent now?
There are lots of good things! (Laughs) Being able to record a song and go, “Cool, I want to put it out in three months, I can do that!” That’s totally foreign to me, so that’s really exciting. Not having to fight for my case, or sort of go through a hundred people to try to get stuff approved. That’s so refreshing.

And if you want, you can even release an album on the same day as Justin Timberlake.
Exactly. By the way, who I love. That was an example; I didn’t even try to put out a record that day. But there are so many people on any major label and not enough people to work that project. There are 200 artists and 50 people working – like, how can you possibly take care of everybody? So: no tea, no shade.

How has your artistic freedom influenced the way you approached the music on “Betty Pt. 1”?
If I had written “Taste” and wanted to put it on an album a year and a half ago, I would’ve got, “I don’t know how this fits in with everything. It’s really different for me, and I don’t know how to do different.” I was always encouraged to do what everybody thought was best for me, not sort of expand too much outside of that. Now, I’m putting music out at my own free will and with my own inspiration and vision. With “Taste,” I go, “This is really different, and that’s exactly why I want to put it out.” A song like “Friend Like Me”: I had been writing singer-songwriter songs for the last 13 years of my life – I started writing songs when I was 14 and that was where I learned to write, on a guitar.

I was writing really intimate, sad, quiet songs, “Silas,” “I think, is the closest thing that I’ve done thus far, whereas “Taste” is on my second EP. It wasn’t even on an album because everybody goes, “But you know, you’re not a singer-songwriter.” But I am. That’s exactly who I am. It’s who I’ve always been. And just because I’m a singer-songwriter does not negate the fact that I also want to make pop music and dance on stage. I’m an artist, and I wanted to have more of an emotional range. Just because I can do one, doesn’t mean I can’t do the other.

Ann Arbor – Although previously scheduled to headline Ann Arbor Pride, Ada Vox will not be able to perform at the event on Saturday, Aug. 4 due to a contractual obligation with talent TV show “American Idol.” Pride organizers said that all meet & greet tickets that were purchased may be allowed refund, up to seven days before the event, which is ongoing from Aug. 3 through 5. In Vox’s stead, Brian Justin Crum shall headline.

Crum is an American singer and stage actor from San Diego, California. In 2016, he competed on the 11th season of the NBC TV competition show “America’s Got Talent,” taking fourth place. The full entertainment schedule for Ann Arbor pride will be announced closer to the start of the three-day festival.

This year marks the 24th anniversary of Ann Arbor Pride, formerly known as OUTFest. This year will not only include live music in the form of entertainment, but a kid zone, guest speakers, a variety of food, workshops and even more. This annual event is a pride celebration that is hosted by Ann Arbor’s Jim Toy Community Center and in partnership with a variety of LGBTQ people and allies around Washtenaw County.

Ann Arbor Pride August 3-5, 2018

Crum will perform at the festival’s main stage, located at Kerrytown 121 Catherine St., in Ann Arbor. This event is free and open to the public. All day entertainment beginning at 10 a.m. in the Kerrytown neighborhood of Ann Arbor, located on the corner of Catherine and N 4th Ave. For more information about the event, please visit AnnArborPride.com.

Tickets will go on sale in July for a Sept. 29 celebration by those at Ozone House, an Ann Arbor-based shelter that helps get youth off the streets and into a safe space. That celebration will both commemorate the shelter’s almost 50 years of service, as well as those who have helped it maintain its services.

“We celebrate the young people that Ozone House has the privilege of working with, our hardworking and talented staff, and most importantly, the community that continues to support the lifesaving work that we do,” said event organizers. “As we gear up to turn 50th anniversary next June, we are excited to honor our past and our future plans with all of you!”

The event will include a silent auction, youth speakers and a variety of entertainment.

The event will be held at the Domino’s World Resource Center located at 30 Frank Lloyd Wright Drive in Ann Arbor. More information can be found about the event online at ozonehouse.org.
Concert of Colors Diversity Festival in 26th Year

Since 1993, the Concert of Colors has been a regular Detroit-based, diversity-themed music festival with a goal of “uniting Metro Detroit’s diverse communities and ethnic groups.” This is done with a variety of musical acts that are sourced from around the world. The free festival’s acts this year include everything from the punk sounds of Pennsylvania-based group Tile, the pop and Hip-Hop-influenced work of Flint Native Tunde Olumirand and Iranian artist Mohsen Namjoo – hailed by the New York Times as Iran’s Bob Dylan.

The concert was established by Ismael Ahmed, the former head of ACCESS, or the Arab Community Center for Economic and Social Services, in partnership with New Detroit, a racial justice organization New Detroit. Originally a one-day event at Chene Park, it expanded to three days in 2001 and now it spans from June 11 through 15. This year’s event is being produced by the Arab American National Museum with partners Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Detroit Institute of Arts, the University of Michigan – Detroit Center, ACCESS and the Charles H. Wright Museum of African American History.

SAGE Metro Detroit, Affirmations Host Dual Fundraiser

On Wednesday, Aug. 22, the Affirmations LGBTQ community center will host a dual fundraiser for itself and SAGE Metro Detroit – an advocacy organization for LGBT Elders.

At the event, SAGE Metro Detroit Executive Director Angie Perone and Affirmations Interim Executive Director Lilliana Reyes will talk about the newest service developments for LGBT Older Adults in the Metro Detroit Area.

Refreshments will be provided, including beer and wine. Tickets are $25 in advance and $35 at the door. All proceeds will support both organizations. The event will be held from 6 to 8:30 p.m. To purchase tickets visit https://bit.ly/2K48xsb, call Affirmations at 248-398-7105 or email info@sagemetrodetroit.org.

LANSING — Environmental justice groups are urging Gov. Rick Snyder to veto a package of bills that would give polluting industries and special interest groups control over environmental protections in Michigan. On Monday, July 2, they held a tele-press conference to share insights on how these bills could exacerbate the already dangerous levels of pollution in Michigan communities, undermine clean air and water protections and expose Michiganders to air and water pollution and other and serious health risks.

Speakers included Vickie Dobbins, a River Ridge community activist and Environmental Justice Work member; Dr. Lawrence Reynolds of Flint, a member of the Sierra Club environmental justice group; Theresa Landrum of the Original United Citizens of Southwest Detroit and Michelle Martinez, the state coordinator for the Michigan Environmental Coalition.

The groups say that if allowed to move forward, the bills, SB 652-653, would ultimately lead to more environmental and public health disasters like the Flint water crisis, toxic algae blooms in Lake Erie, Nestle’s Great Lakes water withdrawal and toxic air pollution hotspots in Detroit.

The governor has until July 9 to make a decision on SB 652-653.

The groups are also calling on Gov. Snyder to implement recommendations developed by the Environmental Justice Work Group. The Environmental Justice Work Group was created by Governor Snyder following direct recommendations from the Flint Water Advisory Task Force and the Flint Water Interagency Coordinating Committee’s Policy Subcommittee. The Work Group issued a series of recommendations for action on environmental justice in March, but have yet to hear a response from the Governor’s office.

To find out more information on SB 652-653, go to legislature.mi.gov.

State Veterans Homes Earn a Pair of Perfect Scores in VA Surveys

BY EVE KUCHARSKI

LANSING, Mich. – For the first time, both State of Michigan-managed veteran homes met all 231 standards for nursing home and domiciliary care, according to surveys conducted by the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA).

“Top to bottom, MVAA made a commitment to improve on the work we do in providing long-term care to Michigan’s veterans,” said Michigan Veterans Affairs Agency Director James Robert Redford. “We are proud of the continued hard work and dedication of our staff in Grand Rapids and Marquette who live the commitment by providing the best care to the members who reside in both homes.”

This is the third year in a row that the Marquette Home has achieved a perfect survey result and the first year for the Grand Rapids Home. At GRHV, the 2018 survey results showed marked year-over-year improvement, rising from a met-rate of 87.8 percent of the 231 standards in 2015 to 90 percent in 2016, then 99.5 percent in 2017.

“It’s encouraging to see continuous improvements in care at the Grand Rapids Home for Veterans,” Gov. Rick Snyder said. “The positive results of the federal survey are a direct result of action by MVAA leadership and hard work from the staff who have made it their mission to provide excellent care for our veterans across Michigan.”

The 2018 surveys of the Grand Rapids Home for Veterans and the D.J. Jacobetti Home for Veterans may be downloaded from the MVAA website at MichiganVeterans.com.
Kesha and Macklemore Do Dual Concert at DTE Energy Theatre

‘IT Chapter Two’ features Xavier Dolan and also that Murder-Clown

Do you arthouse? If so, then you already know that Xavier Dolan, the wunderkind director-actor from Montreal, is responsible for an ever-growing body of queer-themed films that enjoy the international swoon on the film festival circuit -- and good ones, too, like Cannes. But if you don’t then you at least know him from watching Adele’s “Hello” video, which he directed. Soon enough, however, you’ll be seeing him play a gay character in the next installment of “IT.”

The hugely successful big screen adaptation of Stephen King’s horror novel will fast forward for “IT Chapter Two” and continue the story of the now-adult kids and the horrors they confront. The grown-up versions will be played by Jessica Chastain, James McAvoy, Bill Hader and Isaiah Mustafa (the Old Spice Guy), as well as Dolan as a towns-person attacked for his sexuality. Meanwhile, Bill Skarsgård will return as sewer-dwelling death reaper Pennywise. No word on if they’re going to write in The Babadook as Pennywise’s love interest, but we can all dream.

‘American Horror Story’ crossover time!

Summer’s here, which means only three months until we get the “American Horror Story” crossover event our witching circle has been chanting for. In September comes the unholy alliance of “Coven” and “Murder House,” colliding the different worlds of Ryan Murphy’s ridiculously entertaining series. Sarah Paulson, “Pose”’s Evan Peters, Kathy Bates, Cheyenne Jackson, Billy Eichner and Leslie Grossman are all involved, and so is a new cast member: “Dynasty”’s Miss Joan Collins. Sure, it’s stunt casting, but that’s kind of what this series has always been about, anyway. And who else but Murphy can put Collins’ camp credentials to work like they deserve? Murphy is also hoping to include Gaga, because of course he is, and he says that the season will be more of a “heightened” story line (as if all earlier seasons were far too grounded in gritty, mundane realism). It should all go deliciously off the rails in the way Murphy shows never fail to do. So once we’re done with the true horror of August television’s “Bachelor in Paradise,” we’ll be ready for something a little less frightening. The timing couldn’t be better.

‘The Ray’ will finally be gay on Blu-ray

You remember when we told you that the first queer animated DC superhero movie was on its way. Well, it’s almost here. “Freedom Fighters: The Ray,” from the creative team behind live-action shows like “Arrow,” “Supergirl” and “The Flash,” is the first time a gay superhero has been the lead character in a DC Comics project. The story follows Ray Terrill (Russell Tovey), a young man who discovers a dying superhero from another Earth, one who looks just like him. He is, and he says that the season will be more of a “heightened” story line (as if all earlier seasons were far too grounded in gritty, mundane realism). It should all go deliciously off the rails in the way Murphy shows never fail to do. So once we’re done with the true horror of August television’s “Bachelor in Paradise,” we’ll be ready for something a little less frightening. The timing couldn’t be better.

Billie Holiday re-sings the blues

Older queer audiences will remember the legendary Diana Ross as Billie Holiday in the acclaimed ’70s drama “Lady Sings the Blues.” And like all good things from the past, someone wants to remake it. But don’t look down your nose just yet. As of right now it’s called “Billie” and has attracted Lee Daniels (“Precious,” “Empire”) to the director’s chair, singer-songwriter Andra Day as Holiday, Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Suzan-Lori Parks (“Father Comes Home From the Wars”) to write the script, and “Atlanta”’s Lakeith Stanfield to co-star. There’s no studio yet, so this is all very early days – look at how long it’s taken those Freddie Mercury and Elton John movies to materialize – so changes and delays are pretty much a certainty. But it’s nice to see important women get their place in the pantheon of biopics. The children must learn about Holiday at least before someone makes a film about Ariana Grande.

Hotter Than July Announces Event Details for 23rd Year

BY JASON A. MICHAEL

LGBT Detroit, the agency that produces Hotter Than July – Detroit Black Gay Pride, has released the schedule of events for this year’s week-long celebration, which takes place July 24 through 29.

Following tradition, Hotter Than July will kick off with Tuesday night’s candlelight vigil in Palmer Park. However, for this year’s edition, organizers have added the words “community chat” to the title.

“The chat is an event I’ve been holding for the last five years where we bring law enforcement and LGBT (people) together to ‘chat’ about community issues and concerns,” said Corporal Dani Woods, LGBT Liaison to the Detroit Police Department. “This year’s theme is in line with HTJ – ‘Honor & Rejoice.’

We will focus on the honor concept by recognizing and honoring those who are involved in the community but are rarely uplifted. The chief will be present and speaking on a few nods to the community and the progress we’ve made thus far.”

The opening party and resource fair will take place at the Woodward Bar & Grill on Wednesday.

“Equality Michigan will be providing light food and refreshments,” said Jey’nce Mizrahi Painzder, Equality Michigan’s transgender advocate. “Also, there will be several trusted agencies present to extend resources on site, including HELP, LGBT Detroit, Trans Sistas of Color Project and the Ruth Ellis Center.”

On Thursday, the event of the day is the Fine Arts Reception at the Carr Center. This year’s exhibition will include over 20 artists from the Detroit area featuring everything from visual art, poetry, music and the culinary arts.

“The show’s purpose is to highlight inclusiveness through creativity,” said Geno Harris, the Carr Center’s curator and organizer of the show.

Friday will be the annual conference, which this year moves to the Community Health Awareness Group’s headquarters downtown. As is HTJ’s tradition for election years, this year’s conference will feature a candidate’s forum. All candidates have been invited and organizers say they are hoping that Democratic frontrunner Gretchen Whitmer will stop by.

The annual Palmer Park Picnic, the HTJ attraction that draws the biggest crowds, will of course take place on Saturday. Cierra Malone and Ron Reeder will emceee the festivities and music will be provided by DJ Romeo Milliown.

Talent scheduled to perform include Jaye Prime & PPT, Adonis Vayne, Alexyn Wunderland, King Scooby, Bria Dupree, Logan Mario, Sebastian St. James, Truth Raines, Raven Davine, Bee Street, D.S. Sense, Travis Dior, Jacobi Polo, Charlie B. Keyz, Tre’lyric and Biance Bad.

In addition, website Black Boy Addictionz will once again be sending porn stars to perform at the picnic. Confirmed so far to attend is BBA’s newest star Manny Killa (for an interview with Killa, see next page).

For Sunday, the final day of HTJ, there are two events. The first is the worship service, which is sponsored this year by One Church Detroit. And the last event of the week is the annual HTJ brunch, which is produced by Imagine This Productions. This year’s brunch will once again take place at the Charlevoix Gallery on Detroit’s east side and feature a food prepared by chef Reggie Hamilton.

All events, except the brunch, are free to the public. Tickets for the brunch are $25. For more information, visit facebook.com/lgbdetroit.

Meet Manny Killa

BY JASON A. MICHAEL

He’s the newest sensation from porn site BlackBoyAddictionz.com. At 24 years old, 6-foot-4 tall and equipped a trim, muscular physique he is known simply as Manny Killa. He is also one of the entertainers set to visit during LGBT Detroit’s Hotter Than July festivities. Born and raised on the south side of Chicago, Manny admits to losing his virginity when he was only 14 years old. Manny, who considers himself bisexual, talks about how promoting himself on social media got him an offer to enter the adult entertainment business and how long he plans to stay in it.

Here’s Manny in his own words:

What made you start doing porn?
I love to have sex and make love and make it something to remember. Last year, I started an OnlyFans page and a Tumblr and it took off from there. Before I knew it, my inbox is piling up and views are growing. People started wanting to make videos with me.

How did you hook up with Black Boy Addictionz?
I was fortunate to be contacted by Montez who is the scout/recruiter for BBA. It was always on my bucket list to become a porn star so I thought why not see what it’s about? I’m a different and very strong individual who will not let things affect what I do. I have to write my story just like anybody else.

How are the realities of doing porn professionally different from what you thought they’d be?
I would say definitely it’s a lot of work. It’s not as easy as it looks. And it’s not as quick as it looks. There’s a lot of work put into it. From stopping and starting and changes scenes and positions, it can be exhausting to the point where you feel like you just worked a 9 to 5 job in a few hours’ time.

Best and worst part of the business so far?
The best would be the pay and being able to travel and go to different places. Most people are not able to travel or whatnot. You get to see new places. That’s something I was not able to do before. The worst would probably be when you have a model who doesn’t show up for the shoot and Michael (Galletta, owner of Black Boy Addictionz) has to go find somebody else who can hurry up and come in and take over and do the shoot. The only other thing would be when it comes to working with another model, if that model isn’t open and able to do different things, it can make it stressful and hard to get the job done.

What’s down the road for you? Do you see a life for yourself after porn or this is something you want to make a career out of?
Right now I can see doing it for a year or two or three. I’m still in the beginning stages. I’m still new. But I can’t see it turning into something long-term. I still have other things I want to do in life as far as a career. But this is a good start. After porn I do see myself going into modeling or starting my DJ and music-producing career. I’m really in love with music. I have a passion for it. So that might be the next step after this.

Manny Killia will be appearing Saturday, July 28 at the Hotter Than July Palmer Park Picnic. For more Manny Killia visit blackboyaddictionz.com or check him out on social media:
