BTL’s Expo to Showcase Metro Detroit Equality Vendors – and Cake!

We invite you to join us Sunday for a celebration and a huge thank you to businesses that support us. Perhaps now more than ever, it is important for our community to recognize and patronize those who value us. It will send a strong message to those who do not!

BY JAN STEVENSON AND SUSAN HOROWITZ PUBLISHERS OF BTL

We are so excited to host the 9th Annual LGBTQ Wedding, Home and Life Expo this Sunday at The Henry, Dearborn’s gorgeous hotel and event venue. It will be glamorous, delicious, fun, energetic and entertaining!

It is also important for each of us to meet these vendors who respect us in the LGBTQ community as customers and as full members of our collective society.

As we write this, Aimee Stephens’ case is about to be argued before the U.S. Supreme Court. She was fired from a local funeral home after many years of service because she transitioned from male to female, her former employers saying that the funeral home’s customers would be unable to deal with a transgender person. The court will decide if trans people are protected under the laws that make it illegal to discriminate on the basis of sex, but we as the collective LGBTQ community can decide that we don’t want to put up with anyone who would discriminate against one of our own. There are other funeral professionals such as Michigan Memorial who welcome us and deserve our business.

Cities, towns and states across the country are trying to enact legislation that allows people to protect their “religious freedoms” by allowing discrimination against and persecution of LGBTQ people, women, immigrants and other less empowered people. Of course we must fight these initiatives in the courts and at the ballot box, but we can stand up for ourselves with our pocketbooks now by supporting the equality-minded vendors who already stand with us against the tide of anti-LGBTQ-ism.

The Expo this Sunday will showcase over 80 vendors who are proactively coming out to meet with LGBTQ people and couples that need wedding services, home improvement, adoption support and a myriad of other things. We as a community have the opportunity this Sunday to meet face-to-face with dozens of businesses that support us and will not discriminate against us – even if they are granted the legal right to do so.

The day kicks off at 11 a.m. with a pre-Expo complimentary continental breakfast provided by the catering department of The Henry – delicious! Eric Swanson of Broadway Brunch at Pronto! will serenade you as you nosh on the delectables! The Expo doors open at noon in the main Presidential Ballroom. It will be fun, joyous, musical – and there will be a lot of cake! (see page 19 for more details.)

So, we invite you to join us Sunday for a celebration and a huge thank you to businesses that support us. Perhaps now more than ever, it is important for our community to recognize and patronize those who value us. It will send a strong message to those who do not!

Interpreting “Sex”

Only one law is at issue: Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. That section prohibits employers who have more than 15 employees from discriminating “because of sex.” The question is how to interpret “sex.” Does it encompass sexual orientation and transgender status or does it mean only male or female?

“In 1964, those were the days of ‘Mad Men,’ “ said Karlan. “This court has recognized again and again forms of sex discrimination that were not in Congress’s contemplation in 1964,” responded Karlan. “In 1964, those were the days of ‘Mad Men,’ referring to the popular television series about the marketing industry during the 1950s that prompted much discussion around sex-based expectations.”

“Most courts didn’t find sexual harassment to be actionable” in 1964, she said, until the Supreme Court eventually ruled that Title VII did include sexual harassment.

The two cases involving sexual orientation Tuesday included one from New York and the 2nd Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals and one from Georgia and the 11th Circuit. Both involved gay men who were fired after acknowledging they were gay. The 2nd Circuit, ruling in Zarda v. Altitude Express, Inc., said the employer’s firing of parachute instructor Donald Zarda for acknowledging he was gay did violate Title VII. But the 11th Circuit dismissed Gerald Bostock’s lawsuit, Bostock v. Clayton County, saying the court was bound to conform to its ruling in an earlier case, a ruling that Title VII does not cover sexual orientation.

The third case, and the subject of the second hour of argument, is R.G. & G.R. Harris Funeral Homes Inc. v. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. It marks the first time the U.S. Supreme Court has taken up the issue of whether a transgender person is protected by Title VII.

The Harris case, from Michigan and the 6th Circuit, involves a funeral director, Aimee Stephens, who presented for years as a man on the job because that was the gender assigned to her on her birth certificate. However, when she got the courage to live true to her gender identity as a woman and came out to her boss, she was fired. Stephens filed a complaint with the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission that ruled that Harris Funeral’s action violated Title VII, and the 6th Circuit agreed.

A First for the Supreme Court

In an opinion piece for The Washington Post Oct. 6, attorney Chase Strangio, who is part of Stephens’ ACLU legal team, wrote that the Oct. 8 argument in the Harris case would be breaking new ground.

“Tuesday may feature the first time the word ‘transgender’ is spoken during oral arguments in the highest court in the United States. And when the justices look out from the bench and see my co-counsel and me at counsel table,” he wrote, “it may be the first time they have looked at transgender attorneys defending our own existence before their powerful bench.”

Interestingly, when ACLU attorney David Cole tried to make the court aware that transgender attorneys were in the courtroom, there was some resistance.

“I say that recognizing that transgender people have a right to exist in the workplace and not be turned away because of who they are or what they do not end with [dress codes or restrooms],” Cole said. “There are transgender lawyers in this courtroom today, and the...”

“Of course there are,” interrupted Justice Neil Gorsuch. “That’s not the question, Mr. Cole.”

Gorsuch was trying to get Cole to address a specific concern, one voiced by a dissenting judge in the appeals court, that covering transgender status under Title VII would cause a “drastic change in this country,” covering things such as bathrooms and dress codes.

“Nobody is questioning the legitimacy of the claims [made by the employee] and the importance of them,” Gorsuch said. “The question is about judicial interpretation.”

Cole said he was “not asking you to apply any meaning of sex other than the one that everybody agrees on as of 1964. ... We’re not asking you to rewrite it.”

“I agree with that,” Gorsuch said. “The question is: When a case is really close, really close, on the textual evidence — and assume for the moment I’m with you on the textual evidence — it’s close, OK? ... At the end of the day, should [the court] take into consideration the massive social upheaval that would be entailed in such a decision and the possibility that Congress didn’t think about it and that is more appropriately a legislative rather than a judicial function?”

Cole said courts have already been venturing into these waters.

“Federal courts of appeals have been recognizing that discrimination against transgender people is sex discrimination for 20 years,” he said. “There’s been no upheaval.

“As I was saying, there are transgender male lawyers in this courtroom following the [Supreme Court’s] male dress code and going to the men’s room. And the Court’s dress code and sex-segregated restrooms have not fallen. So the notion that this is going to be a huge upheaval,” said Cole, “we haven’t seen that upheaval for 20 years.”

Optimism Awaits a Decision

Davidson said he found the exchange between Gorsuch and Cole reason for optimism.

“Gorsuch, who could also be the deciding vote here, seemed to say the employees had the better sense of the literal argument — is this because of sex,” Davidson said.

And Gorsuch’s concern about “massive social upheaval” has a “very easy answer.”

“If Congress doesn’t like how the court resolves this, Congress can always amend the statute,” Davidson said.

“To the extent all these concerns were raised about the bathrooms and the locker rooms and women’s sports and dress codes,” Davidson said, “Congress could always amend the statute... and say what they think the rules should be about each of those things and about religious exemptions.”

“So, the only question here is: Is it discrimination because of sex to fire someone because they are lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender?” Davidson asked. “We seemed to have a majority that agreed that it is, but some of them were troubled about what that would mean.”

It typically takes several months for the Supreme Court to issue an opinion, once a case is argued. Even more typically, with LGBTQ-related matters, the court tends to issue its opinions in late June.

Only 21 states prohibit discrimination in employment based on sexual orientation and transgender identity. Legislation has been pending in Congress for more than four decades, attempting to establish protections nationwide; but, the legislation, which has taken on different forms, has not cleared Congress.

THE HEART OF IT ALL
50 Years After Stonewall SAGE Symposium Oct. 19

"We have seen significant cultural change in the past 50 years, particularly for LGB people, which has prompted more support for equal rights in marriage, employment, housing, health care and beyond — if not federally, then at least in a number of states. However, our community still faces significant violence and unequal treatment under the law."

- SAGE Metro Detroit Executive Director Angie Perone

The Metro Detroit branch of elder advocacy group Services & Advocacy for GLBT Elders, or SAGE as it’s better-known, is taking a look back at history. Specifically, it will be hosting a symposium titled 50 Years After Stonewall on Saturday, Oct. 19, to examine how far the LGBTQ community has come since Stonewall and how far it still has to go.

“We have seen significant cultural change in the past 50 years, particularly for LGB people, which has prompted more support for equal rights in marriage, employment, housing, health care and beyond — if not federally, then at least in a number of states,” said SAGE Metro Detroit Executive Director Angie Perone. “However, our community still faces significant violence and unequal treatment under the law, particularly when it comes to gender expression and gender identity, as evidenced by the recent Supreme Court cases argued on Oct. 8. And the increasing violence and harassment toward our transgender community.

“Intersecting issues of racism compound these issues for transgender people of color,” Perone continued. “The Stonewall Rebellion/Riots, and many other similar riots like the Compton’s Cafeteria Riot in San Francisco, were sparked predominantly by transgender community members of color — those who experienced deep marginalization from nearly every sector of life. Yet this community still experiences some of the most vicious attacks from our government and the general public. While we have made significant strides in the past 50 years, we certainly have more to accomplish on our road to full civil rights.”

Beyond the overview of rights violations in the past, SAGE’s symposium will also take a look at the needs at what SAGE calls the Stonewall Generation.

“The Stonewall Generation, also called the Pride Generation, refers to the LGBT baby boomers who came of age during the Stonewall Rebellion,” explained Perone. “LGBT people were more visible in the United States. They saw the beginning of decriminalization of homosexuality and the passage of landmark legislation like the Civil Rights Act and the Voting Rights Act.”

Before the Stonewall Generation, Perone said, came the Invisible Generation, those that came of age during the Great Depression and World War II, when LGBTQ people were rarely discussed or incorporated into public discourse, and the Silent Generation, those that came of age during McCarthyism and the Lavender Scare, when LGBTQ people were considered a threat to national security and heavily medicalized and criminalized.

“Likely touching on those generations will be historian Tim Retzloff, who will provide a local historical perspective on what was happening in Detroit at the same time the Stonewall Riots were happening in New York,” she said.

“Then our plenary speaker Dr. Cassandra Cantave will present research from AARP’s Maintaining Dignity Report on some of the largest issues recently identified by LGBT older adults,” Perone said. “Our final panel discussion will pull everything together with a multigenerational discussion about how we can move forward and create a vision for the future. Our goal is to bring diverse groups together for conversation, reflection and connection — specifically as we commemorate the 50th anniversary of Stonewall.”

The symposium will take place at Wayne State University’s Eugene Applebaum School of Pharmacy and Health Sciences Building from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. It is located at 259 Mack Ave. in Detroit. Those interested in attending the symposium can visit sagemetrodetroit.org for more information. The event is co-sponsored by AARP. To register visit aarp.event.com/Stonewall50.

The ICON Detroit Leather Weekend Begins Oct. 18

BY JASON A. MICHAEL

The ICON Detroit Leather Weekend is a celebration of leather culture and history in the Detroit community and it’s back for a fifth installment next week. Three nights of events begin on Friday, Oct. 18, at Menjos nightclub for a meet-and-greet. On Saturday the fun continues with the Mr. ICON Detroit Leather 2020 contest at the Marble Bar. The weekend concludes on Sunday afternoon with a pig tea at the Hayloft Saloon.

The ICON Detroit Leather Club has been around for 26 years and throughout that time has hosted dozens of events to raise money for LGBT and HIV/AIDS causes. To date, ICON Detroit has raised over $63,000 for agencies such as the Ruth Ellis Center, the Triangle Foundation, Wellness House of Michigan and many others.

Throughout the years, membership in ICON Detroit has fluctuated.

“Six years ago ICON Detroit consisted of six hardworking members, with four being past title holders, three of whom competed at the International Mr. Leather contest held each year at the end of May in Chicago,” said Steve Teets, a member of ICON Detroit. “We discussed how there used to be so many more contestants from the leather bars and clubs from the Detroit area at IML. We wanted to make Detroit a city that was announced on the map in the Detroit community and it’s back every sector of life. Yet this community still experiences some of the most vicious attacks from our government and the general public. While we have made significant strides in the past 50 years, we certainly have more to accomplish on our road to full civil rights.”

So, ICON Detroit created the Mr. ICON Detroit Leather contest. The first contest took place in 2015 and Jason Black took home the title. Tom Batemen is Mr. ICON Detroit Leather 2019 and he will hand over the title to the new winner at Saturday’s contest. The winner will be named Mr. ICON Detroit Leather 2020 to represent the year they will compete at IML.

Speaking of titles, Teets was Mr. Michigan Leather 2013. He joined ICON Detroit shortly after being awarded the title.

“I became a full member in April 2013,” Teets recalled “We were very busy traveling the state doing fundraising events to help local charities and organizations in each city. We have always been very community-minded and service-oriented and want to make a difference in the communities in which we live, work and play.”

After becoming a full member, Teets became the group’s pledgemaster.

“I will talk to anyone, so the position was a good fit,” he said. “During my years as pledgemaster we helped the club grow to 13 members.”

Teets encourages anyone interested in joining the club to speak to a member during any of the weekend’s events. A pass for all three events is $25 or tickets may be purchased to individual events. At Friday’s meet-and-greet, all the contestants and judges for the contest will be in attendance. At the contest Saturday, there will be an auction consisting of gift baskets as well as some custom Mr. Friendly leather clothing. Sunday’s pig tea is a luncheon event. Mason/Dixon Cross Dressers

Parting Glances

BY CHARLES ALEXANDER

Footnoted in the pages of Civil War history is the intriguing story of a “Mrs. Nash.” First name unrecorded. She’s listed in 1878 U.S. Army military records to have had “a succession of soldier-husbands” (not an unenviable achievement, then as now, I reckon).

Her last, a naive corporal in General George Armstrong Custer’s ill-fated Seventh Cavalry, blew his brains out when his “Mrs.,” so-called, upped and died unexpectedly. Undertakers told hubby she was actually a he.

Another deceiving duo got moonshine drunk one night and tumbled amorously interlocked into a nearby river. They almost drowned. Resuscitated by their Army counterparts, it soon became obvious to all concerned that there was something amiss both above and below their conjoined Mason-Dixon line.

A chance happening also exposed two other unknown Civil War Pvt’s. with unknown privates of their own. They may likely have been the first dykes in American wartime service. If so, they started a long and time-honored tradition. These bivouac butches get passing mention in Union General Philip Sheridan’s memoirs: “An intimacy had sprung up between them,” he comments succinctly, describing one as “masculine,” the other as “prepossessing”.

Of the thousands of brave women who served as nurses (including Florence Nightingale), some 400 “others” – Northerners, Southerners, free, slave, citizen – also served as combatants or spies. They close-cropped their hair, pledged honest loyalty to serve – no physical required – polished their rifles not their nails, learned to “chaw tubbacie,” fought like hell, and died in fields where blood ran so deeply and so richly red.

Two well-known cross dressers did receive high honors for valor: Dr. Mary Walker, and Flint Michigan’s neglected hero(ine), Sarah Emma Edmonds, aka Frank Thompson. Dr. Walker, a surgeon, lived in drag most of her long life, and spent four months butchly undetected in a Confederate prison. She received a Medal of Honor from President Andrew Johnson.

Once Sarah Emma Edmonds (later Mrs. Seelye) proved – 19 years after the Civil War ended – that she was Pvt. Thompson, she was granted a Congressional Honorable Discharge and a handsome $12 monthly pension. She became the only female veteran of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Edmonds was born in Canada, fled a brutal father at 19, rafted the Windsor border to settle in Flint. When a call for 2nd Michigan Volunteer enlistment came, she decided to cross dress. She passed muster after four tries and became a male nurse, then a spy (once shadowing General Robert E. Lee).

Pvt. “Frank” spied as “Cuff,” a black man. Silver nitrate darkened her skin. When an observant slave noticed she seemed to be getting lighter, Cuff quipped, “I always suspected I had a white mother.”

Other disguises were Irish peddler Bridget O’Shea and cook Aunt Sunny. It was all very Victor/Victoria, Civil War style. Unfortunately, “Frank” contracted malaria. Fearing army hospital detection, she went AWOL. Sarah Emma Edmonds (Seelye) died in Texas in 1897.

She was Michigan’ first drag king; and, with two years of distinguished Army service, a damn fine soldier to boot.

The Key to a Wild and Precious Life —

BY MICHELLE E. BROWN

It starts as a thread. Some little tidbit of information dangling out there that captures my attention. A conversation, a news article, radio interview, yes, even Facebook posts and the dance begins.

I reach out and, remarkably, the answer is not only yes but often has led to the next conversation.

That was the case with Judith Kasen-Windsor that ultimately led me to talk about Edie.

“Hello Judith, I host a weekly blog radio podcast. I recently interviewed Walter Naegle (partner of Bayard Rustin) who shared how he is preserving Bayard’s legacy not just in papers but by activities he gets involved with that continue Bayard’s work. I was wondering if you would consider being a guest to talk about Edie?”

Edie Windsor had married Judith in September of 2016 and I saw a similar theme in their stories.

And she said “Yes!” Not just yes but that she said that she “would be happy and honored to share Edie’s story.”

That was in July 2019. We planned to do the interview to coincide with the release of Edie’s memoir in October. We corresponded all summer and once the press began about “A Wild and Precious Life” we started looking for dates.

We had a weekend in September planned but life happened. Judith was involved in a project and I was on baby watch awaiting the birth of my first grandchild. I called and it went to voice mail. The next morning, I reached out again by text.

“Judith, my beautiful granddaughter arrived at 6:25 p.m. I hope your day is going great. Let me know when we might talk this week.”

She replied, “Mazel! I have time for a call right now to schedule the interview.”

As it turns out, she was in their apartment, boxing up Edie’s papers, books and other things to go to New York University to be archived.

She arranged for me to receive an advance copy of “A Wild and Precious Life” and we made a date to talk after I had read it.

I read a lot of books, especially when preparing for interviews. I read them quickly and then go back sometimes and revisit. I was ready to speed through “A Wild and Precious Life” but Edie wasn’t having it.

I felt her stretch out her hand and say, “Tell me your name. I’m Edie Windsor.” (I learned this was Edie’s line, before Thea, when meeting a new woman.)

Edie worked on the book with Joshua Lyon until her death. He finished the book using the hundreds of files Edie left behind that included files on all her family members, letters,
I took Edie to lunch, read her words over dinner. We snuggled on the couch, and yes, I took Edie to bed reading before I went to sleep and picking up her book in the morning.

I laughed, I cried and I recognized what really mattered most in her life was LOVE! Her love of life, love of community, love of justice and, most of all, Thea. And how it allowed her to open her heart after Thea’s death to the LGBTQ community and love again!

So real, so touching, I felt Edie. I thought about her life her times and reflected on mine. She’s no longer just a figure in LGBTQ history, a Supreme Court decision, hers truly was a wild and precious life.

I contacted Judith when I finished the book and joking told her, “I think I’m in love with Edie.”

She replied, “I warned you, her book really shows who she was. The people in NYC who knew her really feel it. For those who didn’t know Edie, now they do. Welcome to my world, I can’t stand when people ask me how long we were together I tell them FOREVER (remember, longevity is not an indicator of intensity). She had that special gift, love!”

Preserving Edie’s legacy keeps Judith going these days. Since Edie’s death, Services & Advocacy for GLBT Elders, or SAGE, named their drop-in center for Edie Windsor; a cultural medallion from New York’s Historic Preservation Center has been placed on her residence; A decision by Pope Francis to host a private meeting at the Vatican on Monday with an American Catholic priest who has been an outspoken advocate for the church to embrace LGBTQ Catholics is being viewed as yet another signal that Francis may be leaning toward changing the church’s long-held position of condemning homosexuality.

Francis’ meeting with Father James Martin, author of the book “Building a Bridge: How the Catholic Church and The LGBTQ Community Can Enter into a Relationship of Respect, Compassion, and Sensitivity,” came one week after three prominent U.S. bishops criticized Martin for his LGBTQ advocacy efforts.

Among the critics was Archbishop Charles Chaput of Philadelphia, who wrote a commentary suggesting Martin’s ministry to the LGBTQ community presented “ambiguities” in church teachings.

“This meeting with the pope refutes the unjustified barrage of criticism he has received from a minority of church leaders and other anti-LGBTQ sectors of the church,” said Francis DeBernardo, executive director of the LGBTQ-supportive Catholic group New Ways Ministries.

“Even more so, it recognizes that Fr. Martin’s approach to LGBTQ pastoral ministry, already praised by bishops, archbishops and cardinals, has won the approval of the highest levels of the church,” said DeBernardo in a statement. “It is a clear signal that Pope Francis is calling the church to conversion away from the negative messages it has sent in the past about LGBTQ people.”

Added DeBernardo: “It is a day of celebration for LGBTQ Catholics who have longed for an outstretched hand of welcome from the church that they love.”

DeBernardo noted that while Francis’s meeting this week with Fr. Martin is another in a long list of LGBTQ-supportive public statements and gestures since becoming pope in 2015, Francis has yet to issue an official doctrinal statement calling for changing the church’s teachings condemning homosexuality.

In fact, according to DeBernardo, the one official statement Francis has made on LGBTQ matters reaffirmed the church’s opposition to same-sex unions and adoptions by same-sex couples.

Nevertheless, DeBernardo and LGBTQ Catholic activists point out that Francis’ outspoken expressions of support for LGBTQ people to be welcomed by the church have been unprecedented and are viewed by some church observers as a possible first step toward changing official church doctrine on homosexuality.

“This is the enigma maybe of Pope Francis,” DeBernardo told the Blade on Monday. “It’s that he has not supported same-sex unions. He’s come out against them in many ways. But he strongly signals and supports LGBTQ inclusion in the pastoral life of the church. Now that might not seem significant and it certainly isn’t the ideal that we would hope and would like.”

“But it is a step that the church takes on its way to changes. Often the change happens first in pastoral practice and that after a period of indeterminate time the effects of that pastoral practice often call for a change in church teaching and will bring about a change in the church teaching.”

Stonewall 50 Finally Gets Our History Right
BY MARK SEGAL

Something very strange happened during June’s celebration marking the 50th anniversary of the Stonewall riots. The LGBTQ community, especially those of us from Gay Liberation Front in New York realized how the history we created from 1969 to 1971 was being distorted by those who had recorded it. Even LGBTQ organizations, whose mission is to give resources and information to media, fell short and had to be corrected by the mainstream media it was supposed to assist.

On an anniversary of this scope, communities begin to both look back at their history and think critically about where they are at present. Right now, our community is struggling with issues of privilege and identity, specifically white male privilege and class-based identity. It’s often been said that history is written by the powerful, and that sometimes those in power embellish or minimize historical facts, or they distort history to purposely maintain a misinterpretation.

Stonewall was and remains the starting point of a contemporary LGBTQ movement for equality. Stonewall is our 1776. There were other demonstrations and disturbances before Stonewall, like the Compton’s Cafeteria Riot in San Francisco in 1965, a sit-in at Dewey’s restaurant in Philadelphia, even organized demonstrations, but none of them created a sustainable inclusive movement. They all failed to gain momentum. The most famous of them were the marches every July 4th at Philadelphia, even organized other demonstrations and disturbances before. While those people who marched in Philadelphia because we felt that deafness. Those of us from Stonewall and Gay Liberation Front were rebelling not only against mainstream society but also against an LGBTQ leadership that was tone-deaf to the counter-cultural and political atmosphere of the 1960s. The marches in Philadelphia were the prime example of that deafness. Those of us from Stonewall and Gay Liberation Front were out, loud and in-sure they had all lost touch with our community. A similar occurrence had happened in the black community in the late ’60s as well. More radical organizations wanted a new approach to the civil rights movement. They thought of Martin Luther King Jr. as a throwback, and as detailed in “Death of a King” by Tavis Smiley, it made his last year on earth a sad one.

Historians who do not make the point that Stonewall was a rebellion against the prime march 3 weeks later were the founders of Gay Liberation Front.

Stonewall was not one night, or two or six. Stonewall was one year, a year of building a community and a sustainable movement. There were people at Stonewall who passed by, people who craned their necks from around the corner watching, people who tossed a stone and ran since the police chased people up and down the street, but the spirit of resistance that gave birth to the new movement was all Gay Liberation Front. We didn’t leave Stonewall after one night.

Organizing Change

It’s often stated that we were so radical that we were dysfunctional. That statement couldn’t be more true. Gay Liberation Front had no permanent chairperson. A stick was tossed at the beginning of the meeting and whoever caught it was the chair. We had no Robert’s Rules of Order and no officers. Everything had to be decided by consensus, and we debated every issue passionately in order to define ourselves because we refused to allow society to define us any longer. We debated everything, including masculinity and white privilege — though that wasn’t the term used at the time. We fought hard amongst ourselves. We even took in stride the ever present shadow of the FBI and NYPD undercover agents. You often heard one member say to another, “Speak into the coffee can,” since we knew we were bugged or had informants, and it turns out we were correct.

So who threw that first brick at Stonewall? The idea that whoever threw the first brick started the movement is a strong one, and if that is the criteria, then the person who threw the first brick was a trans person at the Compton’s Cafeteria Riot in San Francisco. In the case of Stonewall, popular culture wants to believe it was Sylvia Rivera or Marsha P. Johnson throwing the brick. Marsha has stated on the record that she didn’t arrive until 2 a.m.; long after the rioting had started. Sylvia has also jokingly said, “Maybe I threw the second brick.” But what people don’t realize is that Sylvia and Marsha did something much more important then simply toss a brick and be part of a crowd in a riot. They created a sustainable organization where there had been none before, the world’s first trans organization, Street Transvestite Action Revolutionaries, which was a committee of Gay Liberation Front, formed during the GLF occupation of NYU’s Weinstein Hall. It was Gay Liberation Front’s LGBTQ Community Center that became STAR’s first home for homeless trans people. And Marsha and Sylvia did it without public funds, training or programs. They created Star House, funded by contributions from GLF and GY, and with GLF members doing carpentry and electric work to make their new home habitable. In doing so, GLF began to create and shape a community that would offer resources for its most disenfranchised.

There was no segment of society that didn’t feel GLF’s presence that first year after Stonewall. With demonstrations, disruptions and sit-ins, we fought back against media silence, police oppression and the disdain of universities. We did so by creating a grassroots inclusive and community-wide campaign. We would no longer accept a segregated or isolated movement, so we joined forces and marched to free Angela Davis, a black activist, we marched with the Young Lords, who fought against oppression of the Latino community, and the women of Gay Liberation Front were major voices in the women’s movement. We made sure to speak to the straight community as often as we could, and allied with as many who would have us. One of my fondest memories as a member of Gay Youth was going to speak at Oceanside Senior High School with Tony Russomanno and Doug Carver. The school newspaper, The Spider Press (a copy of which is now among the Smithsonian’s papers) wrote the front page headline: “Gay Activist Lecture: They are not Neurotic.

Challenging Tradition

In 1970, the people who had marched in Philadelphia from 1965 to 1969 wanted to do the same old thing again. But those of us in New York wanted no part of it. We didn’t want the status quo. We wanted to resist the status quo, and that is what we marched for. This was a gay liberation march, not a plea for acceptance. The title said it all: “Christopher Street Gay Liberation Day March.” That proposal was presented by Ellen Broidy a member of Gay Liberation Front along with Craig Rodwell and Fred Sargeant. Gay Pride was born.

With the close of that first year between Stonewall and CSGLD, there was now a community in place. And it wasn’t just in New York. Chapters of the Gay Liberation Front popped up in most major cities, as did Gay Youth organizations. In Los Angeles they created a west cost version of the CSGLD march committee, and as far as London the new movement was felt. That break from those Philadelphia marches was now complete and a new movement had been born. From less then 100 marching in Philadelphia in 1969, Gay Liberation Front had inspired a national movement now in the tens of thousands across the country in just one year.

During the life of Gay Liberation Front, we fought the former leadership of our community. The closeted LGBTQ middle class wanted nothing to do with us since our motto, as the famous poster stated, was “COME OUT!” At that time, 99 percent of our community was not ready to come out. We were. But we had our disagreements. Infighting in the organization caused a split and created Gay Activists Alliance, which became popular with historians since it went back to those respectable-looking homosexuals that they preferred to represent our community and who were overwhelmingly white men. They didn’t want those of us in Gay Liberation Front who were in drag, youth, street kids and every shade of radicalism. Want to see the difference between Gay Liberation Front and Gay Activists Alliance? Simply Google a photo of Gay Activist Alliance meetings and note the ocean of cisgender white men. Sadly, Gay Liberation Front’s inclusive community was not to be seen again for a long time. Our community returned once again to assimilation.

Building Blocks of Change

But here is the simple fact: Gay Liberation Front built the community and equality movement we have today. From its earliest achievements from creating the nation’s first gay youth organization, trans organizations and the first Gay Pride, GLF members went on to become the founders of PFLAG and Lambda Legal. They founded the Callen-Lorde Clinic, an episodic care program housing the nation’s first community-based HIV clinic, and the Rainbow Book Fair, the longest-running LGBTQ book fair and largest LGBTQ book event in the country. They founded the Gay Press Association, the nation’s first LGBTQ media organization. They were builders of the first official federally funded affordable housing for LGBTQ seniors and the first to work with elected officials to create LGBTQ liaison commissions in state and city government. Our members stormed live TV shows to end our community’s invisibility long before Ellen DeGeneres or “Will & Grace.”

We went on to organize the first international Gay Youth Conference, the first national LGBT University Student Conference. Members of Gay Youth went on to be founding members of the House of Extravaganza. Identity House, one of the first LGBTQ peer-counseling organizations, counts among its co-founders a GLF member. Identity House and debates on Phil Donahue by GLF members were a major factor that led to the American Psychological Association changing its nomenclature. Others in GLF were and still are the leading writers on sexual politics. And another member was a leader of The Advocate and Out for 33 years.

There is one thing stands above all else: All of us were out. All of us were unafraid to be brave and defined ourselves how we wanted. All of us were steadfast in wading through the unknown and piecing together what we felt we deserved as a community. Gay Liberation Front laid the foundation for what we as a community are today. There has never been another organization in the LGBTQ community that has successfully met its core goals so well. We created a community where there was none before. We showed the world that LGBT people get to tell our own story. And this year the members of Gay Liberation Front claimed their rightful place in the story of our community.
Securing a cake, arranging a florist, booking a venue and tailoring day-of-wedding outfits are all vital, if stressful, steps in the process to a wedding celebration. Now, layer an LGBTQ identity on top of that and the process becomes even trickier. Because even though marriage equality was secured by the U.S. Supreme Court in 2015 and thousands of LGBTQ couples have gotten married since, it'd be wrong to think that the fight for equality for the LGBTQ community is over. In fact, LGBTQ people across all walks of life are still fighting for protections regarding sexual orientation and gender identity across the nation; just this week the Supreme Court heard arguments for several landmark cases that will attempt to secure those rights.

With those protections in the air, more than ever, couples need to ensure that their celebrations of love won’t be put at risk because of the bigoted views of a vendor. To help combat that, Between The Lines’ 2019 Wedding, Home and Life Expo will feature more than 80 equality-minded vendors who are dedicated, whatever one’s sexuality or gender identity, to providing top-notch service.

This year, to draw attention to the necessity of securing those rights and the value of LGBTQ and allied service providers, BTL has compiled three varying perspectives on the process of LGBTQ marriage in 2019.

The Husband-to-Be

Like many wedding stories, Jack Collins’ has a romantic beginning: his fiancé, Gerardo, proposed at Machu Picchu on New Year’s Eve, during their trip to Peru. Now, having booked a venue and an officiant, plans are well underway for the June 2020 ceremony. Securing a DJ and a photographer remains on their to-do list.

Cognizant of situations where same-sex couples were denied service, such as in the Masterpiece Cakeshop case that made it to the U.S. Supreme Court, Collins said they’ve intentionally sought out LGBTQ-friendly service providers for their wedding.

“That was the first step for me,” Collins said. “OK, we’re doing this. Let’s find LGBT-friendly vendors. That was the first qualification. I was not going to start calling around, saying, ‘Hey do you do LGBT weddings?’”

Collins said he doesn’t understand how LGBTQ rights infringe on the rights of others. “I just think it fits in the same category as other marginalized folks are faced with,” Collins said. “Maybe you don’t get that nice venue because your family’s from a certain country or your skin’s a certain color.”

The couple are planning to adopt children, and Collins is well aware of the currently shifting ground in Michigan when it comes to adoption agencies that contract with the state being permitted to discriminate against LGBTQ couples — or any couples, for that matter — on religious grounds.

“In my mind, it goes farther than finding the right adoption agency,” Collins said. “I have friends who grew up having parents in a same-sex marriage. In middle school I had a friend whose dad married a man and she was bullied for that.”

For that reason, they’re carefully considering where to live. Collins said they’d like to live in a more progressive area. And while he grew up in Novi, where he said he was impressed with the great foreign education program he received and that has the advantage of being ethnically diverse, the city also leans conservative.

In the end, Collins believes the ability to legally marry and enjoy all the benefits that go along with that is “so, so huge,” yet “the Equality Act isn’t even passed yet. We need legal, federal protection,” he said.

But for the most part, he considers himself lucky. In particular, he noted his supportive employer who “cracked a bottle of champagne when I got engaged.”
The Legal Expert

“The government has an interest in redressing and preventing discrimination in public accommodation. And when you do hold your business out to the public ... you can't pick and choose who you’re going to serve,” including LGBTQ people, said Jay Kaplan, staff attorney for the ACLU of Michigan, explaining the Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado ruling.

In this case, the baker had claimed designing a wedding cake for a same-sex couple violated his religious beliefs.

"Obviously, freedom of religion is a very important right and gets the strictest constitutional scrutiny from a court. And yet, they found in the balancing test that the government has a compelling interest, in the least restrictive way, to remedy discrimination by enforcing these civil rights laws,” Kaplan said.

However, Justice Kennedy, who authored the 5-4 decision, is no longer on the court, while Justices Gorsuch and Kavanagh are. Similar legal challenges have been made, and Kaplan warns that more may be on the way. In addition, an unprecedented number of judges hostile to LGBTQ rights have been appointed to the federal bench.

Attorney Jay Kaplan believes religious exemptions are the greatest threat to the LGBTQ community today: marriage is just one area of LGBTQ life affected. In recent years, some who oppose LGBTQ rights began employing this new tactic, after other attempts to demonize LGBTQ people had become less effective.

Kaplan and others have likened the manner in which religious exemptions are being used to carve out civil rights to a “sword” used to harm people. Faith-based adoption agencies that contract with the state that discriminate against, or carve out the rights of, LGBTQ couples are another such example. Using religion, one could claim exemption from any law, and, “We would pretty much gut whatever regulations that we have,” Kaplan said.

He compared this to some restaurant owners in the south following the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 who, citing religious belief, refused to serve African-Americans.

While Kaplan said that he doesn’t see a threat to the marriage equality ruling per se, there have been attempts to water it down. For example, it’s been claimed that the marriage ruling sanctions marriage only, but not its benefits — which is false, Kaplan points out.

Kaplan believes religious exemptions are the greatest threat to the LGBTQ community today: marriage is just one area of LGBTQ life affected. In recent years, some who oppose LGBTQ rights began employing this tactic, after other attempts to demonize LGBTQ people had become less effective.

“And they have a willing partner in this current administration, from the top on down, proposing these types of exemptions,” Kaplan said. “We’ve never allowed religious beliefs to justify discrimination on the basis of race, on the basis of other religions. This idea that we can carve out exemptions when it comes to LGBT people — that’s so constitutionally flawed, so wrong. But this isn’t going away anytime soon.”

The Religious Leader

As pastor to an LGBTQ-affirming church, the Rev. Dr. Roland Stringfellow has a predicament when it comes to performing wedding ceremonies for his LGBTQ congregants: they cannot occur in the sanctuary where the church members worship. That’s because the Metropolitan Community Church of Detroit currently shares space with a congregation in the United Methodist faith, and that church’s governing body recently ruled against affirming same-sex marriages. As a “reconciling” church, they can celebrate LGBTQ couples but not permit marriage within the church itself.

“Our choice to be in this United Methodist Church has solely been economical,” Stringfellow explained. “That has not stopped me from marrying couples within our church,” said the pastor, who has married dozens LGBTQ couples since 2005 when it was first legal in California. These days they find another space, such as a park or a congregation, that is affirming and welcoming.

When it comes to being denied wedding-related services, Stringfellow said he was only aware of that happening locally in terms of clergy refusing to perform weddings of LGBT people.

“I had a couple come to me because their pastor would not marry them,” he said. “So they’re not members of my community, but they said, ‘OK, well, then fine, we’ll take our business elsewhere.’ And so they left that congregation because it was not affirming who they were.”

Even before marriage equality, “We have been a resourceful community,” Stringfellow said. “And we’re going to have our ceremonies whether the state recognizes it or not.”

Yet even now that the unions are recognized, he believes the fight for true marriage equality isn’t over.

“While you can find a florist, you can find someone to do your cake, you can find a clergyperson ... there are legal benefits at stake here. And thus, this challenge continues on. We have to continue to make sure the laws of our land reflect our community and the members who live within them. Because otherwise, we’re going to continue to have a two-tiered society, where some are welcomed and others still live in the shadows.

“It is imperative for all of us, whether you are a same-sex couple who wants to get married or is married — it doesn’t matter who you are,” he continued. “This talks about the quality of our community — that we’re going to have people hiding in the shadows, and that should never be.”
BTL’s 2019 Wedding, Home & Life Expo Venue Highlight: The Henry, Autograph Collection

BY EVE KUCHARSKI

From the moment that wedding planning starts, securing the perfect venue should be at the top of the list. In fact, finding the location of the ceremony and reception is so important that in the Brides.com “Ultimate Wedding-Planning Checklist and Timeline” it’s ranked as something that should be secured at least a year in advance. But getting a spot early isn’t the only thing to worry about, couples have to be sure that wherever they choose to get married or host their reception will be accommodating to their needs. And for LGBTQ couples it’s vital that whatever venue they pick it’s an accepting one.

This year, Between The Lines is hosting the 9th annual Wedding, Home and Life Expo on Sunday, Oct. 13. At the event will be over 80 equality-minded vendors and venues eager to assist all couples, regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity, in their hunt for the perfect wedding celebration. The event will be held at The Henry, Autograph Collection hotel in Dearborn that not only serves as the expo’s venue but also as a viable option for couples interested in tying the knot in the Metro Detroit area. This year, The Henry is also BTL’s highlighted venue.

Kari Honomichl is The Henry’s social catering manager. In her role she creates contracts for every couple interested in doing a wedding or large event at The Henry, and she walked BTL through the process of preparing for the big day. First, couples meet with her to decide on the specifics for their event, and at The Henry customization is key.

“I think any venue has their ‘standard package’ that they start with. So, I always run them through our base package and any enhancements that we generally have are in there as well. But I always tell groups, ‘If there’s something that’s not in here that you were wanting to do let me know, because 99 percent of the time we can do it,’” Honomichl said. “So, for example, we just had a wedding a couple of weekends ago that instead of wedding cake, because any wedding would have to bring in their own cake here, they wanted a fun cake shooter dessert. So we customized and created a mini-mousse shooter and it had a slice of cake on the side of what looked like a shot glass. And depending on what different groups want we can put a price on it and generally do it.”

That personalization is what Honomichl said sets The Henry apart from most venues in the Metro Detroit area. Couples looking for a large celebration have their choice of The Plaza Ballroom, which can hold up to 250 guests, The Presidential Ballroom, which can hold 750, and The Gallery, a more intimate setting, that can accommodate events with 40 to 60 guests. The Henry is also familiar with doing uniquely structured events that can last multiple days or accommodate for weddings outside the “standard” bride and groom structure. For a gay wedding last year Honomichl said that both grooms didn’t host their main reception or wedding ceremony at The Henry, but they did have several smaller events at the hotel that were coordinated for the immediate family of the couple.

“We’ve also done fusion weddings where maybe the bride is Indian and the groom is Christian and they’ll have two ceremonies here,” Honomichl said. “They’ll have an Indian wedding in the morning and a Catholic one in the afternoon — we’ve done it and seen it all.”

Once couples decide on the specifics of their event and contracts are done and signed, Honomichl then takes them to meet with an event manager who is the second stage of planning. The manager will help couples do everything from organizing vendors ahead of time and menu planning to day-of coordination — a service included in any wedding package.

“I think most people are surprised that we have that event manager that they’re going to build a relationship with and they’re going to care so much that their day goes smoothly,” she said. “And some people stress about having to set up their reception hall, so I help them understand that our goal is so that you don’t have to do anything on your wedding day but ... celebrate. We’ll handle all the small stuff like if you have favors to put on each plate, a photo table, name cards — we’re there and can help you set up those items, too.”

The Bluewater Kings Band Shares How Wedding Performances Are Some of the Best

BY JASON A. MICHAEL

The Bluewater Kings Band, one of the most popular wedding bands in the Midwest, will return for the fifth time to the Ultimate LGBTQ Wedding, Home & Life Expo on Sunday, Oct. 13. While the band is fully customizable – from three to 14 pieces – it will be a quartet who will perform at the expo.

“We customize band size, we customize vibe depending on what our clients desire,” said Tasha Lord, a vocalist with the band and also one of its producers. She was also quick to point out that the band doesn’t only do weddings.

“Recently, about three weeks ago, we just backed about five different Motown acts,” Lord said. “That was a private event, but we’ve done it publicly as well. So, we do a lot of stuff. Probably about 70 percent of our work is weddings though. We’re hopeless romantics and we love weddings.”

Founded in 2012, the band is composed of a variety of musicians, including many well-known local session artists and several members who perform regularly with big-name acts.

“We do work with a lot of touring artists, so we’ll block out time if someone is going on tour,” Lord said. “We have people working in our bands that go on big national tours. We communicate with them year-round, ‘This is your touring schedule, and this is when...”

6 Trendy Wedding Ideas for a Unique Celebration

BY BTL STAFF

Whether one has just proposed marriage or accepted a proposal, planning for a wedding ceremony can be just as exciting. But between choosing a wedding venue, picking an outfit and arranging for a cake the process of preparing for the big day can become an overwhelming one. That’s why, for this year’s wedding issue, BTL has compiled a list of six creative 2019 wedding trends to make planning for that special day a little easier.

1 Bold Color Palettes

Blush and bashful might have once been the colors of choice, but in 2019 couples are ditching pastels: bold and moody is in. According to themknot.com color combinations like emerald green and blue; cranberry and sage green; and squid ink and midnight blue are the way to go. Fans of metallics can also celebrate, as shiny elements are making their way into everything from wedding cake accents to china and invitations.

2 Statement Wedding Cake

Couples getting hitched in 2018 favored an assortment of desserts but 2019 has brought the focus back on the wedding cake as a centerpiece. In fact, Martha Stewart Weddings says that this year statement tiers are the way to make a wedding day highlight pop even more.

“There’s something so iconic about a wedding cake, so why not go big and bold?” said Amber Karson of Karson Butler Events. Many couples are now opting to create full-color confections that align with the wedding’s color palette or theme.

3 Build-Your-Own Welcome Bag

Thanking and greeting each individual wedding guest is often a couple’s goal, but it can be difficult to do under a tight schedule, especially if the wedding party numbers in the hundreds. Thankfully, a build-your-own welcome bag station at the reception can be a great way to ensure each guest gets a thank-you they’ll love from the couple on their special day. And pairing that gift with a personalized note to each guest and the package is a sure way to please.

4 Bringing Inside Out

As ever, outdoor weddings and receptions can be a popular option for couples who want more versatility and space than a traditional venue might allow. However, just because a wedding is held outside is no reason that it can’t feel just as cozy and homey as the most intimate venue. Lauren Fremont of Loli Events said that “bringing the inside out” has been an immensely popular 2019 trend.

“Couples love outdoor weddings, but to make them feel more like a fabulous dining or living room, we are bringing typical indoor pieces to the outdoors,” she said. That can involve everything from coffee tables to cozy recliners.

5 Smoke Bomb Exits

At any wedding all eyes are on the couple as soon as they make their entrance, but what about their exit? Couples getting married in 2019 are opting for smoke bombs. According to themknot.com “these fun props leave a cloud of dreamy pigment in their wake, which makes for otherworldly photos (and very impressed guests).”

Matching the color of the smoke to the chosen wedding colors is another way to end the night or simply make the hop from ceremony to reception an exciting one.

6 Lighting

At a wedding ambience is everything, and what better way to brighten up a venue — or tone it down — than to control the lights? Rental lights can serve to upgrade a venue’s existing light fixtures or to relay a custom message to guests.

you're in town.' So, it works for them because when they're off the road they play with the best people in the state, playing awesome events, and we get to offer awesome talent.”

Lord explained that while band size can vary significantly, the band actually has a pool of vocalists they work with that far exceeds its maximum of 14 performers.

“We have about 22 singers here in the Detroit area that we work with, and we're known for our horn section. We actually book multiple events per night, so we have a huge musical family. But in peak season in June, and September was crazy too, we book multiple events per night. So, we get a lot of people working. People do different things.”

Since the band will be performing at the LGBTQ Wedding Expo for the fifth time, it's clear that inclusivity is certainly a goal of the band's creators. Lord said that almost since the band's inception, they've been playing LGBTQ weddings as well as straight.

“A couple's a couple,” Lord said. “The Bluewater Kings is all about inclusiveness in general. That's part of our ethos. As soon we started that's kind of been our thing. The LGBTQ community, that’s something that I’ve felt very strongly about since I was born. We’ve been doing it since we started, and when we saw the opportunity to be a part of the expo we said yes and knew it would be fun.”

Enquiring minds want to know: Is there any difference between playing an LGBTQ-inclusive wedding and a straight one?

“Honestly, I mean straight weddings are very fun, too. But LGBT weddings? I’ve never done one that wasn’t fun. I have done straight weddings that weren’t fun sometimes. ... I think when you’re forced to think outside the box your whole life you become a more creative individual in all that you do. And every LGBT wedding we've done has had a cool twist to it.

“When you overcome adversity, there’s this inspirational aspect to it that you don’t get at straight weddings,” Lord continued. “Every wedding is beautiful because love is beautiful, but there’s something about LGBT weddings that is special. Their creativity is wonderful. A couple is acouple and a market is a market, but there are just cool, creative things about LGBT weddings that I love to be a part of personally.”

And The Bluewater Kings go beyond simply performing at weddings, they’ve developed a reputation for working closely with couples and adding their own special touches.

“I work with the couples, typically, for a whole year,” Lord said. “I give them a couple pages of info or sometimes I meet them at a showcase or a bridal show, and we talk about their taste in music, the vibe, all the family traditions they have, how they met each other, etc.”

And whether LGBTQ or straight, Lord said every wedding contains within it a portion of joy.

“It’s a once-in-a-lifetime thing,” she said. “It’s a high. It’s a beautiful, magical, hopeful place to be. There’s so much hope and love in the air. Families come together and seeing all this realness, that’s what makes weddings great. There’s all this joy and realness happening in one place. I love the décor, the decorations ... it’s like Cinderella’s ball. It’s wonderful and it’s not the worst job I’ve ever had for sure.”

For more information about the Bluewater Kings Band, come see them perform live at the Ultimate LGBT Home Life and Wedding Expo or visit bluewaterkingsband.com.

Also Performing at the Expo

Eric Swanson, co-founder and artistic director of The Detroit Actor's Theatre Company, received his bachelor’s degree in music education from Adrian College in 2007, after a term at Oxford (England) studying Shakespeare and evensong. Planet Ant Celebrates 2nd Annual Live Out Fest for LGBTQ+ Freedom, Identity

Hamtramck Nonprofit Spotlights Local Queer Artists, Honors National Coming Out Day

BY BTL STAFF

HAMTRAMCK — For the second year in a row, Planet Ant Theatre will recognize National Coming Out Day with the Second Annual Live Out Fest: A Celebration of LGBTQ+ Identity & Freedom. The four-day festival takes place Oct. 10 through 13 across Planet Ant’s performance venues in Hamtramck: The Planet Ant Black Box Theater, Ant Hall and Ghost Light Bar.

The first of its kind in Hamtramck, Live Out Fest spotlights local queer artists and performers to showcase the profound presence and impact of their contributions to their creative communities and beyond. The festival features the return of “Not In My House” from Kristi Faulkner Dance and The “Gender Bender” Drag Marathon; a world premiere play, “As They Like It,” adapted from the Shakespearean classic and directed by Jared Scott Morin; “Quix, Women & Queers” comedy showcase hosted by Kai Quix; Detroit musical artist and performer DUANE; dance party with DJs Auntie Chanel and Ariel Sports; “Haireoke” hosted by Cole Davis; and the introduction of Drag Bingo & Brunch, Queer Market, Queer Open Mic and much more throughout the weekend.

“After an uplifting and inspiring first year in 2018, we are excited to expand this year’s festival to include more artists and performers, representing a broader range of creative mediums throughout even more queer communities,” said Live Out Fest producer, Kaitlyn Valor Bourque. “We hope to see the vast and varied identities who make up these communities turn up in all of their glory to support their fellow artists and makers throughout this jam-packed weekend!”

Here’s the schedule at a glance:

- Live Out Fest 2019 kicks off on Thursday, Oct. 10th with a special edition of Planet Ant’s weekly comedy variety show: “ThursGay Night Live,” in the Ant Hall. This will be followed by “Haireoke” with Cole Davis: a wig-centric karaoke takeover at Ghost Light bar.

- Friday, Oct. 11, marks the World Premiere Opening Night of “As They Like It” in the Planet Ant Black Box Theater, as well as the “Not In My House” dance performance in the Ant Hall. Late-night entertainment features the “Quix, Women & Queers” Comedy Showcase in the Ant Hall and live music from DUANE and special guests First Responders at Ghost Light.

- On Saturday, Oct. 12, the first Queer Market fills the Ant Hall with vendors selling and presenting a wide variety of goods (interested vendors are invited to register at planetant.com/queermarket). A Queer Open Mic in Ghost Light begins the evening, including second-night performances of As They Like It and Not In My House, followed by GenderBender in the Ant Hall and a closing night dance party in Ghost Light with DJ’s Auntie Chanel & Ariel Sports.

- Sunday, Oct. 13, Planet Ant launches its first official Drag Bingo & Sunday Brunch at Ghost Light, followed by a premiere screening of the “Not In My House” documentary in the Ant Hall. The festival closes with a twilight matinee performance of “As They Like It” in the Black Box.

Earlybird All-Access festival passes are on sale now through October 1. A la carte tickets are also available. All tickets and passes can be purchased at planetant.com/liveout. Individuals interested in volunteering during the festival can reach out to festival producers, Kaitlyn Valor Bourque and Kristi Faulkner, by emailing liveoutfest@gmail.com.

October LezRead: ‘Mostly Dead Things’

Hosted by the Jim Toy Community Center, LezRead is a book club for queer women that meets on the fourth Sunday of each month. In the group’s next meeting on Sunday, Oct. 27, from 4 to 6 p.m., the group will be reading “Mostly Dead Things” by Kristen Arnett.

The book tells the story of Jessa-Lynn Morton who one day discovers that her father has committed suicide in the family taxidermy business. Despite her grief, Morton does her best to keep the business afloat while “the rest of the family crumbles.”

“Her mother starts sneaking into the shop to make aggressively lewd art with the taxidermied animals. Her brother Milo withdraws, struggling to function. And Brynn, Milo’s wife and the only person Jessa’s ever been in love with, walks out without a word. As Jessa seeks out less-than-legal ways of generating income, her mother’s art escalates — picture a figure of her dead husband and a stuffed buffalo in an uncomfortably sexual pose — and the Mortons reach a tipping point,” says the book’s description. “For the first time, Jessa has no choice but to learn who these people truly are, and ultimately how she fits alongside them. Kristen Arnett’s debut novel is a darkly funny, heart-wrenching and eccentric look at loss and love.”

LezRead is held at the Jim Toy Center located at 319 Braun Court in Ann Arbor. New members are welcome and encouraged to email kerene.moore@gmail.com to join the private Facebook group.

Artist Peter Sparling Partners With Equality Michigan for Upcoming Exhibit

Peter Sparling is a known Michigan dancer, choreographer and visual artist who is partnering with not only a venue to put on his next exhibit but nonprofit Equality Michigan. Debuting on Friday, Nov. 1, with an opening reception and lasting throughout the month, attendees will be able to view Sparling’s paintings and videos at Ypsilanti’s Gallery 22 North. Half of all proceeds from the month-long show will go to Equality Michigan.

The reception will be held to “celebrate the show with members of Equality Michigan and the Southwest Michigan community,” write event organizers. “There will be a private showing for Equality Michigan guests only with artist’s talk from 5 to 7 p.m.”

A recipient of the 1998 Governor’s Michigan Artist Award, Sparling is Rudolf Arnheim Distinguished University Professor Emeritus of Dance and an Arthur F. Thurnau Professor Emeritus at the University of Michigan. A graduate of Interlochen Arts Academy and The Juilliard School, Sparling was a member of the José Limón Dance Company and principal dancer with Martha Graham Dance Company. He also directed Michigan’s own Peter Sparling Dance Company from 1993 to 2008 among many other achievements.

“As a solo dancer/choreographer, video artist and painter, I work to translate my own moving body into diverse media, to capture the one or a series of images that hold power and communicate how it feels to live in that instant. For my paintings, I begin by staging photo sessions in which I perform for the camera then curate from the resulting images those that most speak to me,” Sparling writes of his work. “But the photo is merely a portal, an invitation or contour map for further excavations and reenactments of the often nude human form. Acrylic paint and the stroke of the brush allow me to reanimate the photographed figure as I return to it my own body memories and sensations and invest in the painted image its lived, kinesthetic presence.”

Gallery 22 North is located at 22 N. Huron in Ypsilanti. To sign up for reception, contact Erin Knott at Equality Michigan: eknott@equalitymi.org.

Ypsi Glow Light Show Friday, Oct. 25

Dance, art and, of course, lights across downtown Ypsilanti make up Ypsi Glow, the city’s all-ages glowing celebration. Held on Friday, Oct. 25, from 7 to 9:30 p.m., people in Ypsilanti can walk across the city and take in not only the lights but interactive outdoor exhibits, too.

“Local artists also activate downtown storefronts with installations, showing just how vibrant downtown Ypsilanti can be,” wrote event organizers. “Several of these windows come to life during the event, along with over a dozen other multi-media projects, like video projections, giant luminaries, performance art, live painting, shadow puppets, chalk muralists and laser shows.”

To find out how to participate or more information about the event visit wonderfoolproductions.org/ypsiglow.

BTL | Oct. 10, 2019 35
It’s 8:30 in Italy, and maybe if Mika didn’t feel so deeply connected to his new album, he’d just want to go to bed. But the sparky glam-pop performer doesn’t mind my before-bed call; in fact, he’s thrilled to be talking about “My Name Is Michael Holbrook” because “this phase is actually more engaging and interesting, and generally I am enjoying it way more than any other album I’ve had to promote.”

Mika’s past work, of course, famously includes his 2007 debut “Life in Cartoon Motion,” wherein he emerged an exuberant-sounding human cartoon, with songs like “Grace Kelly” and “Lollipop.” This album, his first in more than four years, is different in that its core was created after discovering his family’s history. And though it’s been exhilarating to promote, it’s also “ironic considering it’s not the simplest time in my life,” the 36-year-old Beirut-born performer, whose birth name is Michael Holbrook Penniman Jr., says.

Mika spoke about how coming out in 2012 may have affected his career, the “shitty” white piano he wrote “My Name Is Michael Holbrook” on and why he won’t be singing with his romantic partner anytime soon.

Despite his admitted tiredness, Mika was introspective – even rollicking – when we finally connected, once he’d won his battle against rush-hour traffic.

What is not simple about life for you right now?
Well, it all started when I had this premonition about three-and-a-half years ago: I felt like I thought I had grown up 10, 11 years ago and I was like, “You know, I’m an adult.” And nothing appeared to change. Sure enough, as I started writing the record so much change happened in my private life and my personal life, losing five people close to me, including my grandmother.

I’m sorry to hear that.
Well, it’s OK. Thank you. But it happens to all of us. But then on the day I wrote “Tiny Love,” the same day, I get a phone call saying, “You gotta get on a plane cause your mom’s sick,” and then that became this running thing throughout the writing of this record. My mom got more and more and more sick with different diseases that got worse and worse, and you know my mom and I have this very strong link. I was thrown out of school at the age of 8 and she looked at me and instead of being nice to me she just said, “People like you end up in prison or they end up successful, and over my dead body will I have a son who ends up in prison.” (Laughs.)

You definitely chose the right path, didn’t you?
I didn’t really have a choice, trust me, if you knew my mom. (Laughs.) And she trained me three to four hours a day at the age of 8, and I cried every day ‘cause I didn’t want to do it. Then, within four months, I was singing at the Royal Opera House in London, and within six months I was a soloist at the Royal Opera House. So, from that point on, my life changed.
You know, she worked with me up until this record. So this album was kind of made in the midst of a lot of that, and instead of retreating and taking a step back - it interfaced with that darkness from multiple sides - I actually went toward life. I said, "I'm gonna go toward what makes me, me. I'm gonna take my colors - the ones from when I was 17 - and make them shine even brighter. I'm not gonna care about commercial circumstances or the climate of the music industry or that all storytelling seems to be happening mostly in R&B and hip-hop, which is something I just can't do because it's not my musical culture. I'm just gonna go for it. I'm gonna put together a romantic, emotionally driven, heartfelt record and try and make it at the service of emotion and hopefully it'll be bold enough to stand on its own two legs." That's how the album came about and how it was written.

Has this album been cathartic for you?
It's an extremely cathartic piece of work for me. And it's also a kind of provocation to myself where I realize that this idea that we spend most of our lives building our foundations on people that we love and we rely on, there comes a point when that version of your foundation starts to change or shift or disappear, and you have to do it in a different way and the only way you can do it is by knowing where you come from, by being at peace with yourself and celebrating, also, all the people around you who you love. Feeling that sense of self-worth is the only way you can have a chance of figuring out where the hell you're going to end up. We don't really know who we are, and anyone who says, "I know who I am" ... you're never gonna know who we are, and anyone who says, "I know who I am" ... you're never gonna fucking know really who you are.

But we think we'll figure it out when we're older. Then we fall in love, we get our heart broken, and we start again.

It's a lot of distractions.
A lot. But that's OK. I don't mind that. That's also one of the main motivations for writing for me, so I'll take it.

Which motivation are you referring to?
Trying to figure out who we are and that changing all the time.

Can you tell me about the first song that you wrote for the album and why you decided to start there?
It was born in a graveyard. (Laughs.) In a place that I had never been to, that I had completely disassociated from my identity, and that was Atlanta, Georgia.

Right, you went to see your family plot.
Yeah. Superstition. (Laughs.)

You were being superstitious?
I don't think it's superstition. I don't like looking at a black piano, and I don't know why I don't like looking at a brown piano. For some reason this idea of a white piano I got used to when I was a kid and so that's all I really want to see.

What does the white represent to you?
Non-institutional education. (Laughs.) I was going to music college, I was going to rehearsal. Even when I was at conservatory at the Royal College of Music, as an adult I was studying as a baritone and all of the pianos were black pianos - academic, institutional lessons on black pianos - and then the white piano was something you'd see on the cover of a Barry Gibb album. I had a white piano and actually, to tell the full story, I had a black piano when I was a child and that piano I decided, with a friend of mine, to paint it white when I was six years old. Ever since then it stayed white, and it's this kind of really tacky house paint. Terrible finish. It's a piece of crap kind of paint job. But I've used that. So for me I was going to write on a white piano all the stuff I wanted to do – all of my music – and then I would go and sing, like, (John) Braham and Italian songs that were written 100 years ago on the black piano, so I associated the two with that.

So when it came to actually coming back to writing in my home studio I wanted to write on a white piano. So I went out and bought a white piano and it turned out to be the worst piano that they had in the entire piano warehouse. I was like, "Why don't you have a better piano?" He was like, "Cause no one wants a fucking white piano, so we give them to people who don't give a shit about piano playing." He was such an asshole. People who work at music stores are famously rude. So whenever I was at the music store I would always buy the worst piano that they had in the entire piano

You've acknowledged disappointment in the commercial aspects of the industry. Do you think coming out ever had any effect on your career?

I don't know. I'd like to think not. I think that the commercial consequences of my sexuality were more to do with what was indelibly written into my music, by me, and inevitably immiscible when you listen to it from before I was even signed. That aspect did have consequences, especially in the United States. But it's OK. It's not OK now, but back then I made peace with the fact that I was considered a little bit less than and when I asked why they'd be like, "Well..." I would never get a clear answer. But I always felt like it kind of was there.

Times have changed. That's not the case anymore, and thank god. But I do think, if anything, that kind of frustration that I felt, and some of the limitations, some of the commercial consequences of my sexuality, actually provoked me to come out. If I think about it honestly, that frustration actually riled me so much that it encouraged me to come out publicly. You're like, "What's the point of being in a pigeonhole? What is wrong with you?" There's no difference. Music is music. It exists beyond anything. And in the end, I was just quite roused, so it encouraged me to come out. I think that's a good reaction to have, rather than going the other way.

As much progress as we've made, your song with Italian singer Jack Savoretti, called "Ready to Call This Love," is still a rare thing.

Well, let me tell you: He's a really good looking guy. (Laughs.) He's charming. He's like an old-fashioned movie star, but in a 30-something-year-old body.

Is that what appealed to you about him when you chose your male duet partner?

His voice. Firstly, the fact that he didn't even bat an eyelid at the fact that it was a love song and it didn't even come up in conversation. He was just like, "It's really beautiful." That was it. "I'd love to do this, it's really beautiful, full stop." And then the fact that his voice is such a contrast to mine and all that, and when you consider that he's a married guy and he's got a kid, it was just a no-brainer for him.

People are gonna say, "Why didn’t Mika pick a gay duet partner?"

And I'm gonna say, "Well, why not?" That’s it. That's really all I can say. Because it's beautiful. And I was asked this, actually, in an interview a week ago for a major gay website in Europe and I said, "Have you done interviews with heterosexual couples who have done duets? Girl and guy?" He said, "Yeah." I said, "Did you ever ask them if they were ever actually in a relationship or if they actually wanted to be in a relationship with each other? If they actually found each other attractive?" So I said, "What's the difference between two guys?" He said, "Oh yeah, you've got a good point." I said, "Considering you're coming from a gay website, don't you think you should've thought about that beforehand?"

There's a real push for LGBTQ roles to go to LGBTQ actors, and some people feel the same when it comes to music, especially since duets between two men happen so infrequently.

And I completely respect that. If anything, I really like and I respect that opinion, and I love the fact that a song like this can even provoke a question like that. I think that's a good thing. It's a good conversation to have. It's not like, "Oh, is the song cool or not?" It's nothing to do with that. It's, "Should I have had a gay guy or not with me?" I think that's a really good dialogue to provoke.

Could you have even released a song like this at the beginning of your career? Would that have been allowed?

Allowed? I don't know. I would like to say that it would’ve been allowed. But it's hard to imagine it would've happened. That's the most diplomatic answer I can come up with. And you know what, besides, I would’ve given songs to my partner to sing, but the truth is that Andy sings like a donkey so it would’ve sounded like shit. The only thing he knows how to sing are Morrissey songs because there's only one or two notes in them! (Wickedly, playfully laughs.)

And on that note, I'll let you go to bed.

(Laughs.) And on that note, he's gonna kill me.

Zauberland (Magic Land)
An Encounter with Schumann’s Dichterliebe

Music by Robert Schumann and Bernard Foccardoule
Texts by Heinrich Heine and Martin Crimp
Stage direction by Katie Mitchell
Julia Bullock, soprano
Cédric Tiberghien, piano

As violence rises, a young woman waits at the border of Zauberland — a magical world of security and peace. Composer Bernard Foccardoule seamlessly interweaves 16 new songs with Schumann’s Dichterliebe, as a backdrop to this new theater piece that explores the relationship between a 19th century romantic sensibility and world view and our 21st century reality of mass migration and violence.

Deep Inside Hollywood

BY ROMEO SAN VICENTE

Cynthia Nixon joins cast of 'The Gilded Age'

Now that you've seen the "Downton Abbey" movie are you ready for the prequel? Because "DA" creator Julian Fellowes is moving to HBO to tell the story of 19th-century American millionaires and their eventual marriages to broke British aristocrats (the initial premise of "Downton Abbey," by the way, for the rest of you just now joining us). "Gilded Age" will revolve around a young woman, the orphaned daughter of a Southern general who moves into the high society home of her aunts in New York City. Much like on "DA," wealthy hijinks and intrigue will ensue, and the servants will probably have the most compelling story lines. So far the cast includes "Sex and the City" icon and progressive queer activist Cynthia Nixon, Christine Baranski and Amanda Peet. And with no more "Downton" on the horizon (for now), we'll be ready for every bit of this one's certain lavish period detail. More as it develops.

Andra Day sings the blues in 'The United States vs. Billie Holiday'

Lee Daniels, the one-gay entertainment production machine who seems allergic to not having a dozen projects in development at the same time, is about to shoot his next film. He'll go into production next month in Canada on "The United States vs. Billie Holiday." With a screenplay by Suzan-Lori Parks – the first African-American woman to receive the Pulitzer Prize for her play "Topdog/Underdog" – and inspired by Johann Hari's book "Chasing the Scream: The First and Last Days of the War on Drugs," the film will star singer-songwriter Andra Day as the legendary Holiday. The story will be less biopic and more narrowly focused on the time in Holiday's career when she was strategically targeted by the U.S. government in a narcotics sting operation and involved in an affair with the operation's black undercover agent. Joining Day are Trevante Rhodes ("Moonlight"), Garrett Hedlund ("Mudbound"), and "Russian Doll"'s Natasha Lyonne. No word on release dates yet but this feels like a late 2020 award contender to us.

Award-winning queer prison drama 'The Prince' coming soon

Each year at the Venice Film Festival, one LGBTQ-themed film is awarded the top prize, known as The Queer Lion, and this year's recipient was the Chilean film, "El principe (The Prince)." Riding a wave of acclaimed Chilean cinema – last year "A Fantastic Woman" took home the Academy Award for Best Foreign Language Film – "The Prince" is a throwback of sorts to an earlier genre of queer cinema, the homoerotic men's prison drama. Based on a 1970s pulp novel, Sebastian Munoz's debut narrative feature concerns a young beautiful man (Juan Carlos Maldonado) thrust into a steamy lockdown where the rules of survival involve scenarios that contemporary queer media has mostly discarded, relegated to the realm of trite porn fantasy. But it's the casts of culture that new generations of filmmakers often find fascinating, and so here we are with a movie featuring a powerful prison-daddy character known as "The Stallion," and you'll probably want to watch. It begins its theatrical life in early 2020, and will without a doubt winds it way through the queer film festival circuit here before an arthouse rollout.

Dynamo Marketing Generates Buzz for Detroit’s LGBTQ-Owned Businesses

BY EVE KUCHARSKI

Similar to the machine for which it is named, the Dynamo digital marketing company is helping businesses across the Metro Detroit area generate energy around their products and services by better-utilizing and properly curating their digital footprints. And since it’s gay-owned, it’s all being done with a focus on inclusivity. In fact, that’s something that owner and founder Ryan Redoute said he’s passionate about doing.

“Half of my clients right now are part of the LGBTQ+ community and I love that—that’s just so great. ... I’m finding that a lot of business owners are in the LGBTQ+ [community and I keep] finding owners,” Redoute said. Just like in the advertising world when I was working with businesses that were saying, ‘We’re female-owned,’ ‘We’re owned by people of color,’ I love that being a part of the LGBTQ+ community is becoming part of that as well.”

Redoute’s business offers services like paid advertising management, business strategy development, social media management, graphic design, videography and more. And with the existence of a music production arm called Sound Dynamo, creating tailor-made advertising in-house is easily done. But it’s not enough that a business simply has ties to the LGBTQ community or provides interesting products or services. Redoute said he looks for two main qualities when forming new professional relationships: passion and kindness.

“In clients I look for, honestly, just someone I feel I can work well with,” he said. “... Because a lot of people go after the money and they say, ‘Forget about it. I don’t care what the people are like, I will go after it because of the job or the position.’ But I’ve honestly turned down partnerships or jobs even in the past because I didn’t feel it was a good matchup — and that’s not to say that they’re bad and I’m good, it simply just felt like it wasn’t right.”

Perhaps it was one of Redoute’s first clients that helped instill that frame of mind: his mother, who is the head of the Clinton Township chapter of PFLAG. Redoute aids her in curating the group’s social media, monitoring the official branch’s website and using PFLAG’s digital framework as a means of connecting with the local LGBTQ+ community. Currently, he’s focused on building up the existing online presence to allow for more discretion on the part of those who will reach out to the group.

“That way, people can discretely, if they wish, go and Google things in their home or their personal environment and they can find the information without having to put themselves out there,” Redoute said. “So, I have helped them with posting on their social channels, with making social updates — kind of like their tech guy. And it’s similar to other services I offer to my other clients, so it kind of blends in in that respect, too. And then, of course, I also go to some of the meetings to offer support in an in-person capacity.”

He said that working with PFLAG and his mother in a professional capacity has opened his eyes to the inequities many LGBTQ+ people face not only as community members, but as business owners, too. This is something he tries to be mindful in his other ventures.

“She’s finding that there’s a huge need in the trans community still and that we who are in the LGBTQ+ community know that. I’m realizing by meeting all of these business owners that starting a business is hard enough to deal with — growing it, building your revenue, especially in this super-saturated world we live in of online businesses — the last thing brick and mortar business owners need is to feel like they can’t be themselves,” he said. “And if I can be the source in Metro Detroit for people to go to, [for] owners that are in the LGBTQ+ community to not be afraid that they can’t be themselves ... then I can feel more than satisfied that I have become that.”

And though this local, family-run PFLAG chapter might be his first direct tie to LGBTQ activism, Redoute’s experience extends far beyond family. A graduate of Michigan State University, Redoute has worked in a variety of marketing capacities with companies like Zephyr Media Group, Carat and Pandora throughout his career around the greater Chicago and Detroit areas.

“I worked in analytics, the planning side, the strategy side — everything. And I really loved it, because I’m a jack of many skills, so in my head I was thinking, I’ve got to try all these out to make sure that I like all of them and see which one I end up liking the most. But I ended up liking all of them, anyway,” he said with a laugh. Still, despite being pulled in many directions, Detroit seemed to be the biggest draw.

“I knew I wanted to be back in Detroit. I saw that Detroit was on this Renaissance, I really wanted to get my foot in the door in terms of making connections while the city is kind of in this developmental stage,” he said. “... I’m excited that I have noticed I’ve gotten a lot of clients that are a part of the LGBTQ+ community and I foresee myself getting more in that space as well — just through even referrals, anything like that — and I’m just excited to establish my mark even more. I’m excited to keep going, keep doing work and really being that source for small businesses in the Metro Detroit area and even in Detroit to use the power of digital marketing to promote their business but also just help people out.”
